

Conference Announcement: What Law Governs International Commercial Contracts?

On October 18, 2013, Brooklyn Law School is hosting an important symposium on the question of what law governs international commercial contracts. A link to the event is here. Below is a short description of the symposium. This should be of great interest to private international lawyers and the international arbitration community.

About the Symposium With the continued dramatic growth of international commerce, a critical question has become even more important: What law governs the contracts behind the commerce? Key issues include:

- In much of the world, courts accept the choice of the parties to a contract as to what law will govern it - but this principle is not accepted everywhere. Even in nations where it is accepted, differences abound.
- Should the ability of parties to select the law governing their contract be approached differently in the increasingly prevalent world of international commercial arbitration?
- In many arbitral systems, parties may select not only the law of a sovereign state, but also “rules of law” emanating from non-state sources, such as “principles” promulgated by international organizations. Should courts show the same deference to the parties’ choice of non-state law?

The Hague Principles on Choice of Law in International Contracts, prepared by the Hague Conference on Private International Law and now nearing completion, are expected to be quite influential, both in establishing the principle of party autonomy to select the law governing commercial contracts and in developing the principle and its limits.

This symposium addresses the important issues described above - from the perspectives of both current law and the "best practices" represented by the draft Hague Principles.
