

New Italian Private International Law Blog

A new blog on private international law was recently launched in Italy. It is called Aldricus, after the name of a glossator who explored private international law issues in the middle of the 12th century.

The general editor of the blog is Pietro Franzina, who teaches at the university of Ferrara. The posts are written in Italian.

Conflictoflaws.net wishes all the best to this new blog.