

Political Agreement on the Reform of the Evidence and the Service Regulation

After years of discussion the Council of the European Union and the European Parliament have finally reached agreement on the reform of the Evidence and the Service Regulation. The new rules aim to improve the cross-border taking of evidence as well as the cross-border service of documents in particular through an enhanced use of information technology (notably electronic communication and videoconferencing).

The European Parliament's official press release is available here. For a more detailed coverage see the contributions on the International Litigation Blog and the EAPIL Blog.
