The following contributions might be of particular interest for the readers of this blog:

- Auf dem Weg zu einer europäischen Abstammungsverordnung? - Licht und Schatten im Vorschlag der Europäischen Kommission
Editorial by Christine Budzikiewicz on the Commission Proposal for a EU Regulation on Parenthood and the Creation of a European Certificate of Parenthood
- Europäischer Emissionsrechtehandel - Eine Momentaufnahme nach der Reform durch das „Fit for 55“-Paket

Sebastian Steuer on European emissions trading: Carbon pricing according to the “cap and trade” principle plays a key role in European climate policy. As part of the “Fit for 55” package, the Emissions Trading Directive has, once again, undergone comprehensive revisions and has been substantially toughened in certain respects. This article gives a basic overview of the current state of European emissions trading after the recent changes. It explores the chief components of the Emissions Trading Directive, highlights the economic differences between quantity- and price-based regulation, and discusses the interplay of the EU emissions trading system with international and German climate policy.

▪ Microplastics Litigation: eine rechtsvergleichende Orientierung

Stephanie Nitsch on Microplastics Litigation: The present paper provides a comparative law analysis of liability for microplastics pollution with a special focus on product liability as well as liability due to deliberate or negligent breaches of statutory duties or duties of care.

▪ Bundesgerichtshof, 18 April 2023, II ZR 184/21

Susanne Zwirlein-Forschner discusses a decision of the German Federal Court of Justice on the law applicable to liability due to economically destructive actions and to the assignment of claims.
