Happy New Year from ConflictofLaws.net (now also on Bluesky)!

The editors of ConflictofLaws.net would like to wish you a year filled with happiness, health, and success, academically and otherwise.

2024 has been another great year for the blog, with close to one new post per day (bringing us to more than 5,500 posts in total) and record numbers of readers and subscribers. Our content, just like our readership, reflects the global scope of the blog, with popular posts including Saloni Khanderia & Shubh Jaiswal's article on the application of the lex fori 'by default' in Indian courts, Mayela Celis' note on Smith & Wesson v Mexico, Orji A Uka & Damilola Alabi's contribution on service under Nigerian law, Yasmín Aguada & Laura Martina Jeifetz two-part piece on international judicial cooperation and technology in private international law, and Tobias Lutzi's comment on the CJEU's decision in Real Madrid.

In addition to our e-mail newsletter (which continues to be surprisingly popular), you can subscribe to our blog on LinkedIn, Twitter/X, and – from this year on – Bluesky.
