

Sovereign Immunity and the Enforcement of Investor-State Arbitration Awards: Lessons from Devas V. India in Australia, The United Kingdom and India

Written by Samhith Malladi, Dual-qualified lawyer (India and England & Wales), and Senior Associate, Shardul Amarchand Mangaldas [Bombay office]; and Niyati Gandhi, Partner, Dispute Resolution, Shardul Amarchand Mangaldas [Bombay office]

The Recalibration of Enforcement Doctrine

The global campaign to enforce arbitral awards against the Republic of India arising from its long-running dispute with Devas Multimedia has witnessed a significant doctrinal shift in the treatment of sovereign immunity within the enforcement of investor-state dispute settlement (ISDS) awards.

To recall, the dispute arises from a contract entered in 2005 between Devas Multimedia Private Limited (Devas) and the Indian state-owned Antrix Corporation (Antrix), which was the commercial arm of the Indian Space Research Organisation. Antrix had agreed to lease S-band spectrum to Devas to broadcast its multimedia services in India. Antrix terminated this contract in 2011 citing national security concerns. In a nutshell, the dispute spawned three concluded arbitrations – a commercial ICC arbitration between Devas and Antrix and two investor-state arbitrations between Devas' shareholders and India under the India-Mauritius Bilateral Investment Treaty (BIT) 1998 and the India-Germany BIT 1995. In 2022, Devas' Mauritian shareholders commenced another investor-state arbitration against India under the India-Mauritius BIT in relation to India's efforts to thwart the award against Antrix in the ICC arbitration, which currently remains pending before the Permanent Court of Arbitration. An overview of the various proceedings arising from this dispute has been previously discussed on this blog here.

Devas and its shareholders won favourable awards in all three concluded arbitrations. Since then, Devas and its shareholders have commenced enforcement proceedings in several jurisdictions across the world. Recent judgments from courts in the United Kingdom and Australia – arising from the Mauritian shareholders' attempts to enforce the favourable ISDS award in various jurisdictions – have not only reaffirmed the centrality of sovereign immunity in enforcement proceedings but have also echoed the analytical approach to assessing the enforceability of ISDS awards adopted by Indian courts. This post situates the UK and Australian judgments within the broader trajectory of Indian jurisprudence and considers the implications for the future of ISDS enforcement.

Early Presumption in Favour of Enforcement of Arbitral Awards

The early efforts by Devas' investors to enforce an ISDS award against India were successful in overcoming India's defence based on sovereign immunity. In Deutsche Telekom v. India, German investors in Devas won a favourable ISDS award in a Geneva-seated UNCITRAL arbitration against India for compensation in 2020. Thereafter, aside from successfully resisting India's efforts to set aside the award in the seat courts in Switzerland, the investors have been successful in having the award recognised as enforceable in the US, Singapore and Germany under the New York Convention 1958 (NYC).

The observations of a US Court in 2024 while enforcing the award are illustrative of a presumption in favour of the enforcement of ISDS awards. The US Court rejected India's claim to sovereign immunity under the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act 1976 (FSIA) on the basis of the "arbitration exception" in the FSIA. The court held that India could not claim immunity given that it had agreed to arbitrate under the India-Germany BIT in accordance with the UNCITRAL Rules. Tellingly, the US Court proclaimed "Enough is Enough!". The approach of the US court, enforcing the award under the New York Convention, is reflective of the restrictive theory of sovereign immunity, which limits a state's immunity from lawsuits in foreign courts to acts of a private nature, such as commercial activities, while preserving immunity for acts performed in its sovereign capacity. This theory acknowledges that states often engage in commercial activities and should be held accountable like private entities in those contexts.

At the time of these enforcement efforts, there was no discussion of India's commercial reservation to the NYC and whether the dispute before an ISDS tribunal is considered "commercial" under Indian law. India's reservation to the NYC states: "India will apply the Convention only to differences arising out of legal relationships, whether contractual or not, that are considered commercial under the national law." India is not the only state to have made such a reservation to NYC, and not the only State refused this defence. In Zhongshan Fucheng Industrial Investment Co. Ltd v Nigeria 112 F.4th 1054 (D.C. Cir. 2024), a Chinese investor sought to enforce an award against Nigeria under the China-Nigeria BIT before a US court. The US has adopted a commercial reservation under the NYC. Nigeria sought to resist enforcement of the award on the ground that the dispute arose out of a relationship that was not commercial in nature. The court disagreed and adopted a broad interpretation of the word "commercial", observing that the BIT itself was signed to promote commerce and the dispute did not need to arise from a contract in order to be commercial.

However, as discussed below, in recent enforcement attempts against India, India's arguments on the question of whether ISDS awards were "commercial" in nature and fell within the scope of this reservation have been assessed in new light. Courts in Australia and the UK have in recent judgments accepted the renvoi to Indian law's characterisation of enforceable "commercial" awards as not including ISDS awards.

Australia: Treaty Reservations and Domestic Legal Classification

As discussed here, the Full Federal Court of Australia's decision in Republic of India v. CCDM Holdings, LLC [2025] FCAFC 2 illustrates the growing judicial circumspection in enforcement proceedings against sovereign states. The court reversed the prior decision in the first instance by the Federal Court, where the court had enforced the award against India. The court of first instance had concluded that India was not immune under the Australian Foreign States Immunities Act 1985 (Australian FSIA) as it had waived its sovereign immunity by ratifying the NYC. The court had not been convinced of the impact of India's commercial reservation to the NYC, noting that enforcement was sought in Australia and Australia had not made any such commercial reservation.

The Full Federal Court disagreed with the reasoning of the court of first instance. Applying the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, 1969, the court noted that the commercial reservation had modified the relationship between India and other NYC contracting states as regards the obligation to enforce foreign awards in Article III of the NYC. Given that it applied, the court concluded that the arbitral award related to a dispute as to rights under public international law – which was different from a “commercial” dispute. This was reinforced by the fact that the termination of the contract with Devas had arisen from “public policy” concerns, which were again not commercial in nature.

The Australian court’s willingness to defer to India’s own legal characterisation of the transaction underscores the significance of domestic law in the enforcement calculus. The decision demonstrates that, even in the presence of an otherwise valid arbitral award, the classification of the underlying relationship and the scope of the respondent state’s reservations can decisively shape the outcome of enforcement proceedings under the NYC.

United Kingdom: Consent to Arbitrate Is Not Consent to Enforce

The English Commercial Court’s decision in CC/Devas et al. v Republic of India [2025] EWHC 964 (Comm) continued the trend of upholding sovereign immunity as a bar to enforcement of ISDS awards against a country that has made a commercial reservation under the NYC. Devas argued that India’s ratification of the NYC constituted a waiver of sovereign immunity under the UK’s State Immunity Act 1978 (SIA). India took the position that there was no such waiver because of the limited scope of the NYC and the commercial reservation that India made when ratifying the NYC.

The court was not convinced that India’s ratification of the NYC was sufficient evidence of a “prior written agreement” under Section 2(2) of the SIA. The court observed that the drafters of the NYC had not intended to preclude the ability of states to assert their sovereign immunity in enforcement proceedings. A crucial cog in his analysis was that Article III of the NYC directs contracting states to recognise foreign arbitral awards as binding and “enforce them in accordance in accordance with the rules of procedure of the territory where the award is relied upon ...”, which preserved states’ sovereign immunity “in its own terms”. He concluded that the ratification of the NYC was in and of itself insufficient to constitute waiver in accordance with English law. Finally, on India’s commercial reservation to the NYC, the court accepted that while under English law the dispute could be termed “commercial”, it could not be assumed that this was necessarily the case under Indian law. The court did not go much further except for noting that the claimants had not advanced a case under Indian law on what constituted a “commercial” dispute. The court simply concluded that “on appeal, the Full Federal Court of Australia has decided this issue in favour of India, which must carry considerable weight in this jurisdiction” (para 98).

At the end of the judgment, the court clarified that its conclusion was “not intended to contradict in any way the enforcement friendly aspect of the NYC, which is its purpose, and the reason for its success, and which has been consistently upheld in the English courts ... It simply recognises that international jurisprudence, which holds that ‘... state immunity occupies an important place in international law and international relations’, also has to be taken into account in deciding the narrow, but important, issue of whether a state has by treaty given its consent to waive that immunity” (para 108). The Court’s closing remark suggests that while the enforcement of foreign arbitral awards continued to be the guiding principle of the NYC, it must co-exist with the domestic procedural law of the enforcing state, particularly on an issue as fundamental as sovereign immunity.

This judgment reinforces the principle that sovereign immunity is not a mere procedural hurdle but a fundamental organising principle of enforcement. The NYC, while facilitating recognition of arbitral awards, does not itself override the statutory requirements for waiver of immunity under domestic law. The English court’s insistence on explicit and unambiguous consent places the burden squarely on investors to secure such waivers at the outset.

Comparative Analysis: Convergence and Doctrinal Resonance

The recent UK and Australian judgments represent a deference to domestic law treatment of awards and the fundamental nature of sovereign immunity as a boundary as central pillars of judicial reasoning. The judgments have the potential to be the inflection points towards a global trend in which the enforceability of investor-state awards is increasingly contingent upon the precise contours of state consent, both at the treaty-drafting stage and in domestic statutory frameworks.

Historical Approach of Indian Courts

The analytical approach now being adopted in the UK and Australia seems to mirror the jurisprudence of Indian courts, which have not treated ISDS awards as enforceable under the New York Convention, and thus the Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996.

Section 44 of the Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, 1996 is a unique statutory expression of India's emphasis on sovereign choice when enforcing arbitral awards. Section 44 enforces only those awards that are considered as "commercial under the law in force in India", rendered pursuant to the NYC and are made in a territory notified by the Central Government. Indian courts have scrutinized when an international arbitration award can be considered "commercial" in nature. In Union of India v. Khaitan Holdings (Mauritius) Limited & Ors. [CS (OS) 46/2019 I.As. 1235/2019 & 1238/2019 dated January 29, 2019] (Khaitan Holdings), India requested the Delhi High Court to issue an anti-arbitration injunction against a BIT arbitration commenced against India by Khaitan Holdings under the India-Mauritius BIT 1998. The court observed that the Arbitration and Conciliation Act (Part II of which incorporates the New York Convention and the Model Law) did not apply to BIT arbitrations, which were different in nature from "commercial" arbitrations given they also involved questions of public international law. The Delhi High Court's decision in Khaitan Holdings echoed its previous decision along similar lines in Union of India v. Vodafone Group Plc [AIR Online 2018 Del 1656].

To be clear, neither the US nor the Australian courts have considered or relied on these decisions.

India's Recent Treaty Practice

Recognising the limitations of the existing enforcement paradigm, India has begun to address these concerns proactively in its treaty practice. The India-UAE Bilateral Investment Treaty (2023) includes an express waiver of immunity from both jurisdiction and execution in respect of disputes submitted to arbitration under the treaty. In a chapter aptly titled "Finality and enforcement of awards", the India-UAE BIT's Article 28.4 states that: "Each Party shall provide for the enforcement of an award in its Territory in accordance with its Law. For the avoidance of doubt, this Article 28.4 shall not prevent the enforcement of an award in accordance with [the] New York Convention." Following Article 27.5 of the India's Model BIT (2016), Article 28.5 clarifies that: "A claim that is submitted to arbitration ... shall be considered to arise out of a commercial relationship or transaction for purposes of Article I of the New York Convention.” Similar language inspired by the Model BIT has been incorporated into Article 29.5 of the recently ratified India-Uzbekistan BIT 2024.

As such, if an ISDS dispute were to arise from an investment made pursuant to these BITs, India has committed to not resist an eventual award’s enforcement as it has done in the various Devas award enforcement actions around the world. This development marks a significant departure from India’s historical approach and signals an emerging consensus that enforcement concerns must be resolved at the outset, rather than left to the uncertainties of enforcement litigation.

Conclusion: Sovereignty as the Organising Principle of Enforcement

The Devas enforcement saga has brought into sharp relief the centrality of sovereign immunity in the enforcement of investor-state arbitral awards. The doctrinal evolution witnessed in the UK and Australia is not a departure from established principles but a reaffirmation of the analytical approach long adopted by Indian courts. As the global legal community grapples with the challenges of ISDS enforcement, the future effectiveness of arbitral awards will depend less on the reasoning of arbitral tribunals and more on the clarity with which states define—and limit—their consent to enforcement, both in domestic law and in treaty practice. It will be important to watch this trend closely as courts interpret the interplay between sovereignty and the enforcement of international arbitral awards.

Conflict of Law Rules in the Early 20th Century Ethiopia: A Brief Legal History

Guest post by Bebizuh Mulugeta Menkir, former Lecturer of Laws in University of Gondar, currently working as a Lawyer and Senior National Consultant for a legal reform project. E-mail: babimulugeta@gmail.com

The Ethiopian legal system is characterized by the absence of codified rules on conflict of laws. Though it cannot be considered as the exact period in which conflict of laws have emerged in Ethiopia, some elements of such rules can be found even in the early 1900s, which is long before the modern codes were developed in 1950s and 1960s.

A book written by Mersehasen Wolederkirkos titled “Ye Hayagenawe Keflezemen Mebacha:Ye Zemen Tarik Tezetaye Kayehute ena Kesemahute 1896-1922”[1] is a record of historical events that happened in 20th century Ethiopia. One of the records is the “Trade Agreement (1908)” that was signed between Ethiopia and France. This agreement, among others, regulates the adjudication of disputes between Ethiopian and French nationals/dependents. This short piece aims to briefly discuss the salient conflict of laws rules that are incorporated in this trade agreement.

The 1908 Trade Agreement and Conflict of Laws

The trade agreement between Ethiopia and France was signed on January 10, 1908. In this agreement Ethiopia was represented by Emperor Menelik II and Antony Klobukowski signed on the behalf of France.[2]

This agreement consists of a total of nine articles (sections) covering a range of issues, including custom tax, immigration and security matters in performance of trade between the two nations.[3] Specifically, Article 7 of the agreement stipulates the agreed terms with respect to the adjudication of disputes, of civil as well as criminal nature, that would arise between Ethiopian and French nationals/dependents. In other words this provision was devoted to regulate questions in cases involving a foreign element.

Accordingly to the contemporary conception, it is a foreign element that triggers questions that require the application of conflict of laws. In the trade agreement a foreign element is established based on the nationality of parties to the dispute that the application of rules stated under Art. 7 of the agreement would arise in case when either one or both of the disputant parties are French nationals/dependents.

Though the provision also brought criminal matters within its scope of application, the part concerning civil cases regulates jurisdictional and choice of law matters that are part of conflict of laws. Regarding jurisdiction, the agreement states that:

Until the Ethiopian legal system is in par with the Europeans, disputes between French nationals (dependents) in civil as well as criminal matters shall be under the jurisdiction of French consulate.[4] (Translation mine)

As it can be inferred from this provision conditionally makes disputes between French nationals/dependents under the exclusive jurisdiction of France, until Ethiopian laws are harmonized with European legal frameworks. Though the provision lacks clarity as to when do Ethiopian laws would be considered to be in par with the European counterparts, Ethiopian courts wouldn't claim primary as well as secondary jurisdiction in civil cases over with both of the disputant parties are French nationals/dependents.

However, the jurisdictional stand will be changed when the dispute is between French national (dependent) and Ethiopian national (dependent). This stipulated in the agreement that reads:

If a French national (dependent) brings legal action against Ethiopian citizen (dependent), in civil and criminal matter, it shall be adjudicated by an Ethiopian judge together with a representative from French consulate.[5] (Translation mine)

As per the above quoted provision of the agreement, disputes between an Ethiopian national/dependent and French national/dependent is under the jurisdiction of Ethiopian (specialized) court. This court was later on established in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in the year 1920/21.[6] While this court is supposed to adjudicate disputes in a bench composed of an Ethiopian judge and a representative from French consulate; and in case of ties between the two the case shall be submitted to the Emperor of Ethiopia, for final decision.[7]

Moreover, the agreement also has a different stand regarding the choice of applicable law in case when the dispute is between an Ethiopian national/dependent and French national/dependent. As such, if one of the parties to the dispute is an Ethiopian national/dependent, the case will be disposed according to Ethiopian law. In this respect, Art 7 of the agreement reads as follows:

If the defendant is an Ethiopian national (dependent), the case shall be adjudicated based on Ethiopian law; which shall also be applicable in case when the defendant is a French national (dependent).[8] (Translation mine)

Generally, according to the trade agreement, legal disputes between French nationals/dependents in Ethiopia are under the jurisdiction of France. Cases involving disputes Ethiopian national/dependent and French national/dependent are under the jurisdiction of Ethiopian court; that shall resolve the case by applying Ethiopian laws.

However, the trade agreement is silent regarding disputes between French national/dependent and another foreign national/dependent residing in Ethiopia. Here, it is interesting to mention that despite what was clearly stated under article 7 of the trade agreement, the provision was later on started to be applicable to foreigners other than French.[9]

[1] Mersehazen Woled Kirkos, Ye hayagenawe keflezemen Mebacha:Ye Zemen Tarik Tezetaye kayehute ena Kesemahute 1896-1922 (Amharic), Addis Ababa University Press, 3rd ed. (2016/17)

[2] Id. p.243

[3] Id.

[4] The Trade Agreement, Art 7, paragraph 1 (as stated , Mersehazen supra 1, p. 243)

[5] Id., Art 7, paragraph 2

[6] Mersehaven, supra1, p. 242&243

[7] The Trade Agreement, Art 7, paragraph 4

[8] Id. Paragraph 3

[9] Mersehaven, supra 1 , p.245

US Supreme Court: Hearing in Smith & Wesson Brands, Inc. et al. v. Estados Unidos Mexicanos (Mexico). Selling guns comparable to selling beer to teenagers?

Written by Mayela Celis, Maastricht University

The hearing in the case of Smith & Wesson Brands, Inc. et al. v. Estados Unidos Mexicanos (Mexico) No. 23-1141 took place in March 2025 before the US Supreme Court. We have previously reported on this case here and here. The transcript and the audio files can be found here.

As previously indicated, this is a much-politicized case brought by Mexico against US gun manufacturers. Mexico alleges inter alia that defendants actively assist and facilitate trafficking of their guns to drug cartels in Mexico. Among the claims for relief are: Negligence, public nuisance, defective condition – unreasonably dangerous, negligence per se, gross negligence, unjust enrichment and restitution, violation of CUTPA [Connecticut Unfair Trade Practices Act], Violation of Mass. G.L. c. 93A [Massachusetts Consumer Protection Act] and punitive damages.

From the perspective of Mexico, this case is of crucial importance because it has a direct impact on its access to US courts to seek justice for all the mayhem that cartels have inflicted using American-made weapons smuggled into Mexico. However, from an American perspective, this case seems to raise many questions and confusion as to how legal standards of proximate cause / aiding and abetting could actually apply, and all of this against the backdrop of the immunity conferred by congress to weapon manufacturers.

Perhaps controversially, counsel for Smith & Wesson Brands, Inc. et al. contended as part of his opening argument that (our summary): no case in American history supports Mexico's theory. And if Mexico is right then every law enforcement organization in America has missed the largest criminal conspiracy in America, and a large beer company is liable for every accident caused by every underage drinker since it knows that teenagers will buy beer, drive drunk and crash. More on this further down.

The proceedings

This case before the US Supreme Court is about overcoming a motion to dismiss. Consequently, it is not about determining which aspects of Mexico's allegations would survive during the litigation (and some are controversial), as indicated by one of the counsels, but whether they pass this legal hurdle.

The US District Court for the District of Massachusetts dismissed the case under the Protection of Lawful Commerce in Arms Act (PLCAA). But the First Circuit reversed, holding that the PLCAA does not bar this suit as Mexico adequately alleged that defendants have “aided and abetted the knowingly unlawful downstream trafficking of their guns into Mexico”.

Unsatisfied with the decision, defendants filed a petition for a writ of certiorari before the US Supreme Court, which was granted. The hearing before the US Supreme Court took place on 4 March 2025. No judgment has yet been rendered.

The hearing

Some prominent statutes and case law mentioned

The applicable statute is the Protection of Lawful Commerce in Arms (PLCAA), which is codified in 15 U.S. Code Chapter 105, sections: §7901. Findings; purposes; §7902. Prohibition on bringing of qualified civil liability actions in Federal or State court; §7903. Definitions – 15 U.S. Code § 7903 (5)(A)(iii).

As its title suggests, section §7902 sets forth a prohibition on bringing of qualified civil liability actions in Federal or State court, the purpose of which is to protect the Second Amendment.

The predicate exception / aiding and abetting is contained in 15 U.S. Code § 7903 (5)(A)(iii), which states the following:

(5) Qualified civil liability action

(A) In general

The term “qualified civil liability action” means a civil action or proceeding or an administrative proceeding brought by any person against a manufacturer or seller of a qualified product, or a trade association, for damages, punitive damages, injunctive or declaratory relief, abatement, restitution, fines, or penalties, or other relief, resulting from the criminal or unlawful misuse of a qualified product by the person or a third party, but shall not include— [...]

(iii) an action in which a manufacturer or seller of a qualified product knowingly violated a State or Federal statute applicable to the sale or marketing of the product, and the violation was a proximate cause of the harm for which relief is sought, including—

(I)any case in which the manufacturer or seller knowingly made any false entry in, or failed to make appropriate entry in, any record required to be kept under Federal or State law with respect to the qualified product, or aided, abetted, or conspired with any person in making any false or fictitious oral or written statement with respect to any fact material to the lawfulness of the sale or other disposition of a qualified product; or

(II)any case in which the manufacturer or seller aided, abetted, or conspired with any other person to sell or otherwise dispose of a qualified product, knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the actual buyer of the qualified product was prohibited from possessing or receiving a firearm or ammunition under subsection (g) or (n) of section 922 of title 18; (our emphasis)

However, other statutes were also alleged to be applicable but the extent to which they were was the subject of controversy. Mention was made to 18 U.S.C. 922, 923, 924 and 18 U.S.C. Section 2 (and other state statutes in the complaint).

Throughout the argument, the Twitter case was mentioned (Twitter, Inc. v. Taamneh, 598 U. S. 471 (2023)). This case is relevant because it deals with aiding and abetting. In its ruling, the Supreme Court held that “Plaintiffs’ allegations that these social-media companies aided and abetted ISIS in its terrorist attack on the Reina nightclub fail to state a claim under 18 U. S. C. §2333(d)(2).” However, this case deals with a different statute as will be pointed out later in this post.

Among other decisions mentioned are:

- Hemi Group, LLC v. City of New York, 559 U. S. 1 (2010). This case is significant because it deals with proximate cause. It concerns the filing of tax reports with respect to the sale of cigarettes online.
- Direct Sales Co. v. United States, 319 U. S. 703 (1943) concerns a manufacturer selling narcotics/morphine to a specific doctor in great quantities, offering them at significant discounts.

Key concepts and some allegations

The hearing revolved around some key concepts: proximate cause, foreseeability, aiding and abetting, knowingly violated, statutory interpretation, predicate exception and immunity.

With regard to the relationship between manufacturers, distributors and retailers, it was pointed out that licensed manufacturers sell weapons to licensed distributors who then sell them to licensed retailers, a small percentage of whom sell those weapons to straw purchasers, some of whom sell them to other purchasers who transfer them to smugglers, who then transfer them to cartels that in turn do mayhem in Mexico. In the US, there is a tier-distribution chain.

One of the key allegations put forth by Mexico was that manufacturers aided and abetted the retailers because manufacturers knew that they would sell the weapons to straw purchasers. Some retailers were identified in a Washington Post article. However, a comment was made to the effect that if the government ignores which retailers are committing such actions how are the manufacturers supposed to know this fact.

A discussion ensued whether proximate cause related to the violation of the manufacturers and Mexico's injury or to the retail sellers and Mexico's injury. However, under the theory that aid and abetting is a form of vicarious liability then it would point to the retail sellers and Mexico's injury. Interestingly, Justice Sotomayor noticed that the proximate cases are a mess and going into that would be like opening Pandora's box.

Several cases were discussed including Twitter and Direct Sales and the fact that they relate to a specific violation. While counsel contended that this case is much easier, in many different respects, than the Twitter case, a justice said that Twitter dealt with a different statute. While discussing case law, and in particular a case from 1876 (St Paul Railway), there was a fleeting exchange (a telling jest) between counsel and two justices (Sotomayor and Gorsuch) about the role of the court as a collective body operating across time.

To the question whether the PLCAA's objective was to bar lawsuits such as this one by foreseeing immunity, it was contended by the counsel for Mexico that this was not the case. Allegations were also made that Mexico is a direct victim and that the actions were foreseeable. Importantly, serial numbers could be erased for some weapons.

Finally, it was noted that 2% of the guns manufactured in the US (about 300,000 -600,000 guns) are likely trafficked into Mexico each year and end up in the cartels. Three models of guns made by the manufacturer seem to target Mexican cartels: the Super El Jefe, the Super El Grito, and the Emiliano Zapata 1911. These are smuggled to Mexico in volume. Whether this mere fact was enough for aiding and abetting was qualified as absurd by the opposite counsel.

Comments

This is a very complex case. Not only are the civil and criminal aspects intertwined but the allegations also concern independent crimes or actions committed by multiple parties before the weapons cross the border and reach Mexico. In addition, very few retailers have been named, and allegedly on the basis of a newspaper article published in the Washington Post. Importantly, unlike Twitter and Direct Sales, there is no specific violation identified.

In my view, there is certain hesitancy with regard to this case. In particular, the consequences of this case can be far-reaching. Think for example of the production of baseball bats, knives, prescription medicines and unavoidably, selling beer to teenagers, all of which were mentioned during the hearing.

Having said that, this case has been politicized and emotions run high on both sides of the border. The need for justice is clear and compelling. There is also a growing sympathy for Mexico and for the need to remedy the wrongs committed in its territory.

From a legal perspective, however, we must recall that this case falls within the confines of PLCAA (and perhaps other statutes) and thus it is a matter of statutory interpretation. With regard to the PLCAA's predicate exception, it would seem very hard to prove that there are substantial allegations regarding a violation and that manufacturers "knowingly violated" a state or federal statute and that the violation was the "proximate cause of the harm" of Mexico's injury. Equally difficult is to prove that there are substantial allegations of "aiding and abetting", which is an example of the predicate exception and should be read as such. Accordingly, the court could rule that there is no prima facie violation (or substantial allegations of a violation) and thus the immunity foreseen by Congress applies. If the court favors this approach, it may not need to go into the analysis of complex concepts such as proximate cause, and in this way, avoid opening Pandora's box.

Brexit and PIL - Belgian Supreme Court confirms the application of the 2005 Hague Convention to jurisdiction clauses designating UK courts concluded after 1 October 2015

By Guillaume Croisant (Linklaters LLP)

The United Kingdom deposited an instrument of accession to the Hague Convention of 30 June 2005 on Choice of Court Agreements (the “Convention”) on 28 September 2020. This instrument of accession became effective after the Brexit’s transition period, on 1 January 2021, and gained binding force within the UK legal order following the adoption of the Private International Law (Implementation of Agreements) Act 2020.

As many readers will be aware, a controversy exists regarding the temporal scope of the Convention. It applies to exclusive choice of court agreements concluded after its entry into force for the State of the chosen court and to disputes initiated after its entry into force for the State of the seized court. EU Member States have been bound by the Hague Convention since its approval by the European Union on 1 October 2015, but what about the UK after its withdrawal from the EU?

According to a first viewpoint, reflected in the UK’s instrument of accession, “In accordance with Article 30 of the 2005 Hague Convention, the United Kingdom became bound by the Convention on 1 October 2015 by virtue of its membership of the European Union, which approved the Convention on that date.”

Conversely, under a second viewpoint (apparently shared by the European Commission in its ‘Notice to stakeholders – Withdrawal of the United Kingdom and EU rules in the field of civil justice and private international law’ dated 27 August 2020, p. 9), the Convention could only apply after the United Kingdom’s ‘independent’ ratification, which occurred on 1 January 2021. If this second perspective were accepted, jurisdiction agreements concluded before this date would not benefit from the mutual recognition system established by the Convention.

In a judgment (in French) dated 27 March 2025 (C.24.0012.F), the Belgian Supreme Court (Court de Cassation/Hof van Cassatie) ruled in favour of the first viewpoint, holding that “The Hague Convention of 30 June 2005 has been applicable to the United Kingdom as a bound State, owing to the European Union’s approval of the Convention, from 1 October 2015 until 31 December 2020, and as a contracting party from 1 January 2021. The argument, in this regard, that the United Kingdom ceased to be bound by the Convention following its withdrawal from the European Union on 1 February 2020, is without legal basis.”

Foreign Sovereign Immunity and Historical Justice: Inside the US Supreme Court’s Restrictive Turn in Holocaust-Related Cases

By Livia Solaro, PhD candidate at Maastricht University, working on the transnational restitution of Nazi-looted art

On 21 February 2025, the US Supreme Court issued a ruling in Republic of Hungary v. Simon,^[1] a Holocaust restitution case with a lengthy procedural history. Delivering this unanimous decision, Justice Sotomayor confirmed the restrictive approach to cases involving foreign states inaugurated in 2021 by Federal Republic of Germany v. Philipp.^[2] In light of the importance of US practice for the development of customary law around sovereign immunity,^[3] and its impact on questions of historical justice and transnational accountability, the Simon development deserves particular attention.

The Jurisdictional Treatment of Foreign States as an “American Anomaly”^[4]

In 2010, a group of Holocaust survivors filed a suit before the US District Court for the District of Columbia against the Republic of Hungary, the Hungarian State-owned national railway (Magyar Államvasutak Zrt., or MÁV) and its successor-in-interest Rail Cargo Hungaria Zrt. (RCH), seeking compensation for the Hungarian government’s treatment of its Jewish population during World War II.^[5] The survivors claimed that, in connection to their deportation, their properties had been expropriated and subsequently liquidated by defendants.

As the case repeatedly moved through federal courts (in fact, this was not the first time it reached the Supreme Court),^[6] the possibility for the US judge to extend its adjudicative jurisdiction over the Hungarian State remained controversial.

Claimants based their action on the so-called “expropriation exception” to sovereign immunity, codified by §1605(a)(3) of the 1976 Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act (FSIA).[7] This provision excludes immunity in all cases revolving around rights in property taken in violation of international law, at the condition that that property, or any property exchanged for such property: 1) is present in the US in connection with a commercial activity carried on in the US by the foreign state, or 2) is owned or operated by an agency or instrumentality of the foreign state and that agency or instrumentality is engaged in a commercial activity in the US.

This exception represents an unicum within the law of sovereign immunity, as it allows courts to extend their jurisdiction over a state’s acta iure imperii (expropriations are indeed quintessential sovereign acts).[8] In recent years, this provision has often been invoked in claims of restitution of Nazi-looted art owned by European states (see, for example, Altmann v. Republic of Austria,[9] Toren v. Federal Republic of Germany,[10] Berg v. Kingdom of Netherlands,[11] Cassirer v. Kingdom of Spain).[12] Crucially, this exception also requires a commercial nexus between the initial expropriation and the US. In its Simon decision, the US Supreme Court addressed the standard that plaintiffs need to meet to establish this commercial nexus in cases where the expropriated property was subsequently liquidated. The Court read a “tracing requirement” in the text of the provision, thus establishing a very high threshold.

Property Taken in Violation of International Law

The Court had recently addressed the interpretation of §1605(a)(3) in Federal Republic of Germany v. Philipp, where the heirs of German Jewish art dealers sought the restitution of a collection of medieval reliquaries known as the Guelph Treasure (Welfenschatz). In that case, the Supreme Court focused on the opening line of the expropriation exception, which requires that the rights in property at issue were “taken in violation of international law”. By explicitly recognizing that this language incorporates the domestic takings rule,[13] the Court set in motion a trend of increasingly restrictive interpretations of the expropriation exception that is still developing today.

To reach this result, the Supreme Court interpreted the expropriation exception as referring specifically to the international law of expropriation. This narrow reading of §1605(a)(3) allowed the Court to assert that the domestic takings rule had “survived the advent of modern human rights law”, as the two remained insulated from one another. Accordingly, even if the Nazi plunder were considered as an act of genocide, in violation of human rights law and the Genocide Convention,[14] it would not fall under §1605(a)(3), as this provision only applies to property takings against aliens (reflecting the traditional opinion that international law is concerned solely with the relations between states). From this perspective, the Philipp decision adhered to the International Court of Justice’s highly criticized conclusion in Jurisdictional Immunities of the State (Germany v. Italy) that immunity is not excluded by serious violations of ius cogens. [15]

The impact of this restrictive turn has already emerged in a couple of cases adjudicated after Philipp. In order to circumvent the domestic takings rule, claimants have tried to argue that the persecutory treatment of Jewish individuals by several states during the Holocaust deprived them of their nationality, rendering them either de iure or de facto stateless. In the wake of Philipp, courts have been sceptical of this statelessness theory – although they appear to have left the door ajar for stronger arguments in its support.[16] A recent decision by the District Court for the District of Columbia has gone so far as to exclude the expropriation exception in cases involving a states’ taking of property from nationals of an enemy state in times of war.[17] The District Court followed the same reasoning as in Philipp: if §1605(a)(3) refers to the international law of expropriation, not only human rights law but also international humanitarian law are excluded by its scope of application. As I noted elsewhere,[18] post-Philipp court practice now excludes the expropriation exception in the vast majority of takings by sovereign actors, regardless of whether they targeted their own nationals, the nationals of an enemy state or stateless individuals.

The Commercial Nexus and the Commingling Theory

The recent Simon decision adopts the same restrictive approach as Philipp, but shifts focus to the expropriation exception’s second requirement: the commercial nexus with the US. Under §1605(a)(3), the property that was taken in violation of international law, or any property exchanged for such property (emphasis added), needs to have a connection with a commercial activity carried by the foreign state, or one of its agencies or instrumentalities, in the US. Crucially, the Hungarian government liquidated the assets allegedly expropriated from defendants. The Supreme Court was asked to decide whether the claimants’ allegation that Hungary used the proceedings to issue bonds in the US met the commercial nexus requirement. Complicating matters further, the proceeds were absorbed into the national treasury where, over the years, they had mingled with billions in other revenues.

The Simon question concerns an important portion of expropriation cases, since property is often taken for its monetary rather than intrinsic value. Therefore, with some specific exceptions (such as takings of artworks or land), expropriated properties are likely going to be liquidated, and the proceeds are bound to be commingled with other funds. Years after the initial liquidation, proving the location of the money originally exchanged for those properties is extremely challenging, if not impossible. In 2023, the Circuit Court had indeed concluded that “[r]equiring plaintiffs whose property was liquidated to allege and prove that they have traced funds in the foreign state’s or instrumentality’s possession to proceeds of the sale of their property would render the FSIA’s expropriation exception a nullity for virtually all claims involving liquidation”.[19]

The Simon claimants thus proposed a “commingling theory”, arguing that instead of tracing the initial proceeds, it is enough to show that they eventually mixed with funds later used in commercial activity in the US. Delivering the opinion of the Court, Justice Sotomayor rejected this theory, reading a specific tracing requirement into the wording of the expropriation exception. In order to meet this requirement, claimants can identify a US account holding proceeds from expropriated property, or allege that a foreign sovereign spent all funds from a commingled account in the United States. As clarified by the Justice, these are but some examples of how a claimant might chose to proceed. Rather than examining various common law tracing principles, however, the Court here simply ruled that alleging that a foreign sovereign liquidated the expropriated property, commingled the proceeds with general funds, and later used some portion of those funds for commercial activities in the US does not establish a plausible commercial nexus. Although this ruling imposes a high bar for claimants seeking to invoke the expropriation exception, the Court found this outcome less detrimental to the FSIA’s rationale than accepting the “attenuated fiction” that commingled accounts still contain funds from the original property’s liquidation. In Simon, for example, while the initial commingling of funds occurred in the 1940s, the suit was only brought in the 2010s, after “several institutional collapses and regime changes”.

A Restrictive Parable

The Supreme Court based its Simon decision on a textual interpretation of the expropriation exception, which identifies “that property or any property exchanged for such property”, without providing a specific alternative criterion for property exchanged for money. The Court also looked at the legislative history of the FSIA, rooted in the 1964 Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino decision.[20] The Sabbatino case prompted US Congress to pass the FSIA’s predecessor, the Second Hickenlooper Amendment to the Foreign Assistance Act of 1964, “to permit adjudication of claims the Sabbatino decision had avoided”. [21] In Simon, the Court read its Sabbatino precedent as part of the FSIA’s history, and as such relevant to its interpretation – especially considering that Sabbatino also revolved around property that had been liquidated. Crucially in Sabbatino “the proceeds . . . in controversy” could be clearly traced to a New York account, aligning the case with the tracing requirement identified in Simon.

The Simon Court also echoed the foreign relations concerns that it already discussed in Philipp, justifying its restrictive interpretation of the FSIA on the Act’s potential to cause international friction, and trigger reciprocity among other states’ courts. In this regard, the Philipp and Simon decisions seem particularly keen to do some “damage control” on the effects of the expropriation exception, reducing its scope from a “radical” to a “limited” departure from the restrictive theory of foreign sovereign immunity.

This restrictive turn mirrors the trajectory of human rights litigation under the Alien Tort Statute (ATS).[22] Starting with the Second Circuit’s decision in Filártiga v. Peña-Irala, [23] the 1789 ATS was used by US courts to extend their jurisdiction on human rights claims brought by aliens. In 2004 (the same year as the seminal Altmann decision on the FSIA’s retroactive application), [24] the Supreme Court rejected the interpretation of the ATS as a gateway for “foreign-cubed” human rights cases.[25] Warning against the risk of “adverse foreign policy consequences”, the Court provided a narrow interpretation of the ATS. This conservative approach has been framed as part of the shift in attitudes that marked the passage from the Third to the Fourth Restatement of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States.[26] The decision to restrict the reach of the ATS was in fact rooted in political considerations, as testified by the pressure exercised by the Bush administration to hear the case.[27] The new geopolitical landscape had diminished the strategic importance of vindicating international human rights law, and the use of domestic courts to advance public rights agendas had faced severe criticism, with US courts being accused of acting as judges of world history.[28] The Philipp and Simon interpretations of the FSIA reproduce this passage from an offensive to a defensive approach within the law of foreign sovereign immunity.

Conclusion

Since Philipp, the expropriation exception has been limited to property takings by foreign sovereigns against aliens during peacetime. This development has arguably returned the FSIA to its original intent: to protect the property of US citizens abroad, as an expression of “America’s free enterprise system”. With Simon, this provision’s application has been further restricted where the expropriated property was liquidated. This approach explicitly aims at aligning US law with international law. In this process, however, the US judiciary’s controversial yet proactive contribution to human rights litigation, with its potential to influence the development of customary law, is taking a more conservative and isolationist stance.

[1] Republic of Hungary v. Simon, 604 U. S. ____ (2025).

[2] Federal Republic of Germany v. Philipp, 592 U. S. 169 (2021).

[3] Thomas Giegerich, ‘The Holy See, a Former Somalian Prime Minister, and a Confiscated Pissarro Painting: Recent Us Case Law on Foreign Sovereign Immunity’ in Anne Peters and others (eds), Immunities in the Age of Global Constitutionalism (Brill | Nijhoff 2014) 52. <https://brill.com/view/book/edcoll/9789004251632/B9789004251632_006.xml> accessed 11 December 2024. An important conference on the state of the art on the international law of foreign sovereign immunity recently took place at Villa Vigoni (Italy), under the auspices of the Max Planck Institute for Comparative Public Law and International Law. The full program of the event can be found here:

<https://www.mpil.de/en/pub/news/conferences-workshops/the-future-of-remedies-against.cfm>.

[4] As described by Riccardo Pavoni, ‘An American Anomaly? On the ICJ’s Selective Reading of United States Practice in Jurisdictional Immunities of the State’ (2011) 21 The Italian Yearbook of International Law Online 143.

[5] For an historical contextualization, see Szabolcs Szita, 'It Happened Seventy Years Ago, in Hungary' [2014] Témoigner. Entre histoire et mémoire. Revue pluridisciplinaire de la Fondation Auschwitz 146.

[6] See Republic of Hungary v. Simon, 592 U. S. 207 (2021) (per curiam) (Supreme Court of the United States).

[7] The FSIA, enacted through Public Law 94-583 on October 21 on 1976, is codified in Title 28 of the U.S. Code, Chapter 97, Part IV - Jurisdictional Immunities of Foreign States.

[8] Charlene Sun and Aloysius Llamzon, 'Acta Iure Gestionis and Acta Iure Imperii' (Oxford Constitutions - Max Planck Encyclopedia of Comparative Constitutional Law [MPECCoL]) <<https://oxcon.ouplaw.com/display/10.1093/law-mpeccol/law-mpeccol-e188>> accessed 30 April 2025.

[9] Altmann v Republic of Austria [2001] 142 F. Supp. 2d 1187 (United States District Court, CD California).

[10] Toren v Federal Republic of Germany 2023 WL 7103263 (United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit) (unreported).

[11] Berg v Kingdom of the Netherlands 2020 WL 2829757 (United States District Court, D. South Carolina, Charleston Division) (unreported).

[12] Cassirer v Kingdom of Spain [2006] 461 F.Supp.2d 1157 (United States District Court, CD California).

[13] Mayer Brown, "'Domestic Takings' Rule Bars Suit Against Foreign Nations in U.S. Court" (Lexology, 3 February 2021) <<https://www.lexology.com/library/detail.aspx?g=1d4af991-a497-47be-80f2-dd78c184baa1>> accessed 30 April 2025.

[14] UN General Assembly, Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, United Nations, Treaty Series, vol. 78, p. 277, 9 December 1948, <https://www.refworld.org/legal/agreements/unga/1948/en/13495> [accessed 29 April 2025].

[15] Jurisdictional Immunities of the State (Germany v Italy: Greece intervening), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 2012. For a critical discussion of this judgment, see Benedetto Conforti, 'The Judgment of the International Court of Justice on the Immunity of Foreign States: A Missed Opportunity' (2011) 21 The Italian Yearbook of International Law Online 133.

[16] See Simon v Republic of Hungary [2023] 77 F4th 1077 (United States Court of Appeals, District of Columbia Circuit). The court here clarified that its decision did not "foreclose the possibility that such support exists in sources of international law not before us in this case or based on arguments not advanced here"> Ibid, para 1098.

[17] de Csepel v Republic of Hungary 2024 WL 4345811 (United States District Court, District of Columbia).

[18] Livia Solaro, 'US Case Further Restricts Holocaust-Related Art Claims' (The Institute of Art & Law, 11 November 2024) <<https://ial.uk.com/author/livia-solaro/>> accessed 30 April 2025.

[19] Simon v Republic of Hungary (n 16) para 1118.

[20] Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U. S. 398 (1964) (Supreme Court of the United States). This case revolved around the expropriation of sugar by Cuba against a private company in protest for the reduction of the US sugar quota for this country. After the sugar in question was delivered to a customer in Morocco, both the Cuban state and the private company claimed the payment of the price, which in the meantime had been transferred to a New York commodity broker. The case eventually was adjudicated in favour of the National Bank of Cuba, based on the Act of State doctrine.

[21] As noted by the Court in Republic of Hungary v. Simon, 604 U. S. ____ (2025) (Supreme Court of the United States) 15-16.

[22] 28 U.S. Code § 1350.

[23] Filartiga v Pena-Irala [1980] 630 F.2d 876 (United States Court of Appeals, Second Circuit).

[24] Republic of Austria v. Altmann, 541 U. S. 677 (2004) (Supreme Court of the United States).

[25] Sosa v. Alvarez-Machain, 542 U. S. 692 (2004) (Supreme Court of the United States); for a definition of 'foreign-cubed' claims, see Robert S Wiener, 'Foreign Jurisdictional Algebra and Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum: Foreign Cubed And Foreign Squared Cases' (2014) 32 North East Journal of Legal Studies 156, 157.

[26] See Thomas H Lee, 'Customary International Law and U.S. Judicial Power: From the Third to the Fourth Restatements', SSRN Electronic Journal (2020) <<https://www.ssrn.com/abstract=3629791>> accessed 14 March 2025.

[27] Naomi Norberg, 'The US Supreme Court Affirms the Filartiga Paradigm' (2006) 4 Journal of International Criminal Justice 387, 390.

[28] Ugo Mattei, 'A Theory of Imperial Law: A Study on U.S. Hegemony and the Latin Resistance' (2003) 10 Indiana Journal of Global Legal Studies 67, 420.

Legislative direction for recognition of foreign judgments in Sri Lanka: A new sign-post in the private international law landscape

This post was written by Rose Wijeyesekera, Professor of Private and Comparative Law, Chair / Department of Private and Comparative Law - Faculty of Law, University of Colombo

Introduction

Sri Lanka (formerly known as 'Ceylon') is an island in the Indian Ocean, and is home to a total population of 21,763,170, consisting of Sinhalese 74.9%, Tamils 15.4%, Muslims 9.3%, and 0.5% consisting of others such as Veddhas, Burghers, and gypsies. The legal system of this island nation is a unique blend of native laws and the laws that were placed by the colonial powers from 1505 to 1947, when the country gained independence. Since then, Sri Lanka has been a democratic republic and a Unitary State governed by a constitution. The Sri Lankan legal system is primarily based on Roman-Dutch law, inherited from its colonial past under the Dutch, and English common law introduced by the British colonial rulers. Apart from these two, the legal system incorporates elements of Kandyan law (representing indigenous customs of the Sinhalese), Tesawalamai (customary laws of the Tamils of the Northern province of the country) and Muslim law. These personal laws apply in matters of personal law, such as marriage, divorce, and inheritance, depending on the community to which an individual belongs. All Muslims including the sub-categories such as Moors and Malays, are governed by Muslim Law in their personal matters, while Kandyan Sinhalese (a minority of the Sinhalese who hail from "Kandyan Provinces" / the hill country, are governed by Kandyan Law. These customary laws bear a territorial and/or a religious nature. Most of these laws are enacted, but some remain open leaving room for judicial interpretation. The court system in Sri Lanka is structured hierarchically and is designed to ensure justice through a combination of traditional and modern legal principles. The system comprises the Supreme Court at the apex, the Court of Appeal, Provincial High Courts, District Courts, Magistrate Courts, and tribunals such as Labour Tribunals, Quazi Courts, and Mediation Boards.

The legislative sources of private international law are derived from multiple frameworks in Sri Lanka including the Civil Procedure Code (1889), Companies Act, No. 7 of 2007, Arbitration Act No. 11 of 1995 and Intellectual Property Act, No. 36 of 2003. The Reciprocal Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Ordinance No. 41 of 1921 (REJO) and the Enforcement of Foreign Judgements Ordinance No. 3 of 1937 (EFJO) were the most relevant in the sphere of reciprocal recognition, registration and enforcement of foreign judgments. Yet, these statutes, which were enacted during the British colonial era, were limited in their application as they applied only in judgments relating to commercial matters. The lacunae created by the absence of legal direction with regard to the recognition of foreign judgments in matters relating to divorce, annulment and separation of spouses, was huge in a socio-economic context where outward migration has become unprecedentedly large in recent times.

Pre-legislative judicial activism

In December 2023, the Court of Appeal had to face this lacuna, where Champika Harendra Silva v. M.B. Weerasekara Registrar General and Others. The case concerned a Sri Lankan-born couple who had registered their marriage in Sri Lanka and migrated thereafter to England, had obtained a divorce decree from a competent court in England. The divorcee man applied to the Registrar General (RG) of Sri Lanka to register the divorce, but it was rejected on the basis that the divorce was obtained from a British court, which according to the RG, was not a 'competent court' under the Marriage Registration Ordinance of Sri Lanka. Upon rejection by the RG, the divorcee filed for a writ of certiorari pleading the court to quash the RG's rejection, and a writ of Mandamus recognizing the decree of divorce granted by the English court. The court made headlines when, through judicial interpretation, it granted both writs declaring that a foreign decree of dissolution of a marriage contracted in Sri Lanka is valid and effectual in Sri Lanka subject to three guidelines. (a) Such Court must be in law vested with the jurisdiction in respect of the dissolution of a marriage and be the 'Competent Court' in the foreign country; (b) the Parties must have been residents of the foreign country for a reasonable period of time; and (c) the parties must have been properly represented and participated in the legal proceedings according to the laws and procedures of the foreign country. The decision was progressive and timely, and reiterated the necessity and urgency of legislative intervention in addressing this issue of recognizing foreign judgments especially with regard to matrimonial matters.

The legislature intervened promptly to address this legal lacuna by introducing the Reciprocal Recognition, Registration, and Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act, No. 49 of 2024 (RRREFJ). The Act is effective from March 26, 2025, in respect of 53 countries listed in the Schedule. It repeals both REJO and EFJO.

Limited application of Private International law through REJO, EFJO, and Hague Conventions

REJO and EFJO, which were introduced to facilitate the cross-enforcement of foreign and Ceylonese (Sri Lanka as it was known then) judgments, had proved woefully inadequate to cater to the country's ever increasing cross-border transactions in both commercial and personal matters. One of the main reasons was REJO's limited scope, as it catered to rather uncomplicated monetary matters arose during the colonial times. It did not address matrimonial matters, perhaps because of limited overseas travel and limited marriages between Sri Lankans and foreigners. It has also been subjected to criticism due to stringent rules and procedural complexities, and understandably, they catered to procedural requirements of a far-less technologically facilitated financial world. Another deficiency was the absence of clear provisions for appeals. This hindered the enforcement process, and created legal uncertainty.

The RRREFJ Act of 2024

The 2024 Act comes in to bridge the gap between global realities and the local legal framework. Its scope is much wider than REJO, as it applies to the reciprocal recognition, registration and enforcement of foreign judgments regarding matrimonial matters, i.e. divorce, annulment and separation, as well as monetary obligations. It recognizes final and conclusive judgments of Scheduled jurisdictions. As at present, they are the 53 Commonwealth countries. An application for recognition, registration and enforcement of a foreign judgment can be made within a period of ten years from the final judgment, and by way of summary procedure as provided for in the Civil Procedure Code.

In terms of commercial transactions, its application extends to natural persons as well as companies, including Business Process Outsourcing (BPO) companies, which are increasing in the country. The Act does not apply to tax, charge, fine or other penalty payable under a judgment of a foreign court.

However, the Act is restrictive in terms of the application of matrimonial matters of persons whose marriages have been contracted under special personal laws, which are very much a part of the Sri Lankan law relating to marriage and family.

Section 3(1)(b) of the new Act of 2024 states that the Act applies to a foreign judgment for the dissolution or annulment of a marriage or separation of the parties to a marriage only if such judgment is obtained in respect of marriages entered under the General Marriages Ordinance No. 19 of 1907 (GMO) and where such judgment shall be deemed final and conclusive as long as either party to the marriage was domiciled in such country at the date of the judgement; habitual resident in such country for a period not less than one year before the date of the judgment; was a national of such country at the time of the judgment; or both parties have submitted to the jurisdiction of such country. This leaves out Muslims who, under Sri Lankan law, are compelled to marry under the Muslim Marriage and Divorce Act 13 of 1951 (MMDA), and the Kandyan Sinhalese who may choose to register their marriages under the Kandyan Marriage and Divorce Act 44 of 1952 (KMDA). While the majority of the population are governed by the General Law and are required to follow the GMO in matters relating to their marriages, a considerable percentage of the Sinhalese population who are recognized as 'Kandyan' still opt to marry under the KMDA. The Muslims who constitute 9.7% of the total population of the country have no choice but to contract their marriages under the MMDA. The exclusion of their marriages from the 2024 Act raises multiple concerns including their right to equality before the law, which is a fundamental right guaranteed under the national constitution.

Way forward

The RRREFJ of 2024 is a timely legislative intervention in the sphere of private international law in Sri Lanka as it addresses a socially relevant legal lacuna in the country. The legislative effort was well-recognized by the apex court of the country when the constitutionality of the RRREFJ Bill was challenged in S.C.(SD) No.80/2024 and S.C.(SD) 81/2024. However, the Act has room to be more democratic in terms of its application, especially in the current social context in which the nation is struggling to overcome socio-economic devastations caused by multiple reasons including ethnicity, race, and religion. With necessary amendments to avoid these obvious racial and religious exclusions, the Act can strengthen the countries ties with the global village more fully.

South Africa Grapples with the Act of State Doctrine and Choice of Law in Delict

By Jason Mitchell, barrister at Maitland Chambers in London and at Group 621 in Johannesburg.

The Supreme Court of Appeal delivered judgment today in East Asian Consortium v MTN Group. The judgment is available here.

East Asian Consortium, a Dutch company, was part of the Turkcell consortium. The consortium bid on an Iranian telecommunications licence. The consortium won the bid. East Asian Consortium alleged that it was later ousted as a shareholder of the ultimate license holder, the Irancell Telecommunications Services Company. East Asian Consortium sued, amongst others, several subsidiaries of the MTN Group, a South African telecommunications company, in South Africa. East Asian Consortium alleged that the defendants unlawfully induced the Iranian government to replace East Asian Consortium with one of the MTN subsidiaries.

In 2022, the South African High Court held that Iranian law applies to East Asian Consortium's claims. But the Court declined to exercise jurisdiction based on, amongst other things, state immunity and the act of state doctrine. East Asian Consortium appealed to the Supreme Court of Appeal.

The Supreme Court of Appeal reversed the High Court on state immunity and on the act of state doctrine. It reached the same conclusion as the High Court on the applicability of Iranian law, but for different reasons—and clarified that South African law uses the lex loci delicti as its general rule for choice of law in delict (or tort).

There are two immediate takeaways from the judgment:

South Africa's act of state doctrine differs from the doctrine in English law

"...while we owe much to the English common law, and have much to learn from it, our common law is not a supplicant species."

- English law (Belhaj, Deutsche Bank) articulates the act of state doctrine as an exclusionary rule with limits and exceptions. The Supreme Court of Appeal rejects that approach, critiquing it as a doctrine "principally comprehended by what it is not."
- Instead, the Supreme Court of Appeal adopts a broader balancing of interests: a "doctrine composed not of rules but of reasons that count for and against the court's adjudication of a foreign state's acts."
- This interest-balancing version of the doctrine applies even when the lawfulness of the executive acts of a foreign country, taken within its territory, will have to be adjudicated by the South African court.
- The act of state doctrine is a common law doctrine, and the common law is subject to the Constitution. This means that the basis for the doctrine cannot be the separation of powers because, under the Constitution, foreign policy decisions are not beyond judicial scrutiny.
- Comity justifies the doctrine, but comity requires judicial pause not judicial abdication.
- Interest balancing considers, for example, the plaintiff's constitutional rights (and, in particular, its right to have its dispute resolved in court), and the constitutional nature and implications of the claim (here, allegations of public corruption).

South Africa uses the lex loci delicti, but it can be displaced

- In 2010, the High Court in Burchell held that South Africa's choice of law rule for delict is the legal system that has the most real or significant relationship to the dispute, with the lex loci delicti merely being one factor in that analysis.
- The Supreme Court of Appeal held that Burchell is wrong: the general rule is lex loci delicti. The lex loci delicti can be displaced if another legal system has a "manifestly closer connection".
- The Supreme Court of Appeal also held that for transnational delicts (that is, when the relevant conduct or events do not happen in one country), a plurality approach should be taken to determine the lex loci delicti: the country in which the greater part of the events or conduct making up the elements of the delict took place.
- The Supreme Court of Appeal rejected an approach of subsidiary rules for particular delicts. This approach causes uncertainty about which elements should be given primacy for certain delicts. More fundamentally, it is based on the "doctrinal heresy" that South Africa has a law of delicts (like the English law of torts); South Africa instead has a "unified scheme of liability". Subsidiary rules for each type of delict does not rhyme with that unified scheme.

The judgment was a relatively rare 3-2 split. A further appeal to the Constitutional Court is possible.

U.S. Court Issues Worldwide Anti-Enforcement Injunction

This post was written by Hannah Buxbaum, the John E. Schiller Chair in Legal Ethics and Professor of Law at the Indiana University Maurer School of Law in the United States.

Last month, Judge Edward Davila, a federal judge sitting in the Northern District of California in the United States, granted a motion by Google for a rare type of equitable relief: a worldwide anti-enforcement injunction. In Google v. Nao Tsargrad Media, a Russian media company obtained a judgment against Google in Russia and then began proceedings to enforce it in nine different countries. Arguing that the judgment was obtained in violation of an exclusive forum selection clause, Google petitioned the court in California for an order to block Tsargrad from enforcing it.

As Ralf Michaels and I found in a recent analysis, the anti-enforcement injunction is an unusual but important device in transnational litigation. There aren't many U.S. cases involving these orders, and one of the leading decisions arose in the context of the wildly complicated and somewhat anomalous Chevron Ecuador litigation. As a result, there is little U.S. authority on a number of important questions, including the legal standard that applies to this form of relief and the mix of factors that courts should assess in considering its availability. Judge Davila's decision in the Google case addresses some of these questions.

Background

In 2020, Google terminated Tsargrad's Google account in order to comply with U.S. sanctions law. Tsargrad sued, alleging that Google violated its terms of service in terminating the account. Although those same terms included an exclusive forum selection clause choosing California courts, Tsargrad initiated the litigation in Russia. It cited a Russian procedural law that vested Russian arbitrazh courts with "exclusive jurisdiction" over disputes involving sanctioned parties, arguing that this rule prevented it from bringing suit in California.

Tsargrad prevailed on the merits in that case. The court ordered Google to restore Tsargrad's account or suffer a compounding monetary penalty. Google did not restore access, and the penalty mounted to more than twenty decillion dollars (in Judge Davila's words, "a number equal to two followed by thirty-four zeroes"). Tsargrad then started filing actions to enforce its judgment in a number of foreign courts. This prompted Google to seek an anti-enforcement injunction in the Northern District of California.

What Legal Standard Applies to Anti-

Enforcement Injunctions?

An anti-enforcement injunction orders a party not to initiate or continue legal proceedings to enforce a judgment. It looks like a species of anti-suit injunction and might therefore be subject to the test used to decide those. As Judge Davila correctly recognized, though, the two contexts are quite different.

An anti-suit injunction aims to prevent parallel litigation from developing in the first place, avoiding a race to judgment and the possibility of inconsistent judgments on a single matter. Those risks aren't relevant to anti-enforcement injunctions, where the foreign court has already entered a judgment. In such cases, the policy of res judicata also comes into play. Anti-enforcement injunctions are also potentially much more intrusive into other legal systems than anti-suit injunctions. The type of injunction that Google sought would have worldwide effect, blocking legal proceedings not only in courts with concurrent jurisdiction over the underlying dispute but in any court, anywhere, in which an enforcement proceeding might be brought. For these reasons, Judge Davila chose instead to apply the normal test for preliminary injunctions, requiring Google to demonstrate: (1) likely success on the merits, (2) irreparable harm, (3) a balance of equities favoring injunction, and (4) public interest favoring injunction.

Does Breach of a Forum Selection Clause Justify an Anti-Enforcement Order?

Once a foreign court has entered a judgment, it is (and should be) very difficult for the judgment debtor to obtain an order from a U.S. court completely blocking any enforcement efforts. In this case, there were two possible grounds for granting that relief. First, as in the Chevron case, it appeared that Tsargrad's enforcement campaign was vexatious and oppressive. Apparently, Tsargrad had itself described its strategy as a "global legal war"—and may have viewed the twenty-decillion-dollar penalty as leverage to extort a settlement or force Google to defend itself in multiple forums. Second, it appeared that Tsargrad had procured the Russian judgment in breach of an exclusive forum selection clause. As Google argued, issuing an anti-enforcement injunction under those circumstances would both preserve the jurisdiction of the chosen courts and vindicate Google's contractual rights.

The case proceeded on the second theory. This raised two interesting questions regarding a post-judgment injunction. First, because the breach of the forum selection clause had already happened, was there any ongoing or future harm to justify injunctive relief? Judge Davila concluded that there was—not based on the forum selection clause itself, but based on an additional implied term “bar[ring] parties from enforcing judgments obtained in violation of [a] forum selection clause.”

Second, wouldn’t the balance of equities here suggest that Google was far too late in seeking injunctive relief? It could have filed an ordinary anti-suit injunction based on the exclusive forum selection clause when Tsargrad initiated the litigation in Russia, rather than waiting until that action proceeded to judgment. (In Ralf’s and my study, this kind of delay surfaced as one of the most common reasons to deny anti-enforcement injunctions.) Judge Davila maneuvered around this issue. The basis for injunctive relief, he said, wasn’t the breach of the forum selection clause but rather the breach of the implied promise not to enforce judgments procured in violation of the clause. And Google couldn’t have sought relief for that breach until Tsargrad actually began its enforcement efforts.

What About Comity?

Every country has its own rules regarding the recognition and enforcement of foreign judgments. It’s one thing for a U.S. court to deny enforcement of a foreign judgment in the United States, under U.S. rules. But by barring a judgment holder from taking steps to enforce its judgment anywhere, a worldwide anti-enforcement injunction indirectly prevents other countries from considering the enforceability of that judgment under their rules. Judge Davila appreciated the serious comity concerns this raises. He concluded, however, that those concerns were outweighed in this case, citing the “grossly excessive” penalty imposed on Google and the vexatious nature of Tsargrad’s enforcement campaign. With the exception of Russia, then (“it is simply a bridge too far to enjoin a Russian citizen from enforcing a Russian judgment in Russian court”), he gave the order worldwide scope.

Conclusion

Pending a final decision on the merits, the court here did everything it could to block Tsargrad from enforcing the Russian judgment. In addition to entering the anti-enforcement injunction, the court entered an “anti-anti-suit injunction” barring Tsargrad from going back to Russia to seek an anti-suit injunction against the proceedings in California. The open question, as always, is what courts in other countries will do if Tsargard disregards the injunction and continues its efforts to enforce the Russian judgment.

This post is cross-posted at Transnational Litigation Blog.

Tatlici v. Tatlici: Malta Rejects $740 Million U.S. Defamation Judgment as Turkish Case Looms

Written by Fikri Soral, Independant Lawyer, Turkey; and LL.M. student, Galatasaray University, Turkey

A Maltese court has refused to enforce a $740 million default judgment issued by the 15th Judicial Circuit Court of Florida (Palm Beach County) in a defamation suit brought by Applicant Mehmet Tatlici against his half-brother, Defendant Ugur Tatlici. [1] The Florida court’s award—issued on 8 January 2020 in a defamation suit filed by Mehmet Tatlici against his half-brother—was deemed procedurally deficient and substantively incompatible with Malta’s public policy, particularly due to its lack of reasoning and its chilling effect on free expression.[2]

The Maltese court found that the Florida default judgment—submitted as a redacted, one-page certification—could not be meaningfully reviewed, as the complete, reasoned version was essential to assess whether any part of the judgment violated Maltese ordre public.[3] The court emphasized that it is not for the issuing court's clerk to determine what may be withheld, and that the absence of judicial reasoning in a claim involving hundreds of millions in damages was, in itself, contrary to Malta's fundamental procedural standards and ordre public.[4] Notably, the court flagged the stratospheric scale of the damages—€659,932,000—as irreconcilable with Malta's defamation laws, viewing enforcement as a potential threat to freedom of speech and contrary to Malta's ordre public.[5]

At the same time, parallel enforcement proceedings remain ongoing in Turkey, where Applicant Mehmet Tatlici is seeking recognition and enforcement of the same Florida judgment.[6] Simultaneously, a criminal investigation is underway in Turkey, concerning felonies of fraud, aggravated fraud, and document forgery in relation to how the Florida judgment was procured.[7]

Background and Procedural History

The proceedings stem from a protracted intra-family dispute between Mehmet Tatlici and his half-brother Ugur Tatlici, heirs to the late Turkish billionaire Salih Tatlici. On 8 January 2020, the 15th Judicial Circuit Court for Palm Beach County, Florida entered a default judgment in favour of Mehmet Tatlici in Mehmet Tatlici v. Ugur Tatlici, Case No. 50-2018-CA-002361-XXXX-MB, awarding him $740 million in damages for alleged defamation. The judgment was based on Mehmet Tatlici's allegations that online publications on websites and social media had harmed his reputation and caused the collapse of a real estate project in Istanbul, the legitimacy of which is now disputed and appears to be addressed before a Turkish heavy penal court in Turkey for alleged fraud.[8]

Mehmet Tatlici claimed that the online publications led to the termination of a real estate development project in Istanbul, allegedly abandoned by a Romanian investor due to reputational concerns.[9]

Defendant Ugur Tatlici, however, denies any involvement in the publications and maintains that the defamatory material was fabricated by Applicant Mehmet Tatlici and his Florida lawyers to manufacture a basis for litigation.[10] According to his filings and expert submissions, the alleged project was never viable to begin with. The same materials state that the project was legally impossible under Istanbul's zoning laws, relied on fictitious contractual arrangements, and was tied to a Romanian company with only $50 in registered capital, two offshore shareholders, and a concealed ultimate beneficial owner (UBO), lacking any credible financial capacity to support a development of that scale.[11] Defendant Ugur Tatlici also states that he was not made aware of the Florida proceedings at the time and therefore had no opportunity to contest the allegations or raise these objections in the original action.[12] He argues that the judgment was obtained by default through fraud and misrepresentation.[13]

Following the Florida judgment, Mehmet Tatlici launched recognition and enforcement proceedings in Malta and Turkey. In Malta, he filed Application No. 719/2020TA before the Civil Court (First Hall), which dismissed the application on 13 February 2025, citing several grounds, including the absence of a reasoned judgment, the gross disproportionality of damages, and the judgment's incompatibility with Maltese public policy.

Meanwhile, enforcement efforts are ongoing in Turkey, where the case is before the Istanbul 13th Civil Court of First Instance presided over by Judge Hakan Kabalci. In parallel, Turkish prosecutors have opened a criminal investigation into the circumstances surrounding the Florida judgment, focusing on felonies of fraud, aggravated fraud, and document forgery. The matter is expected to be brought before a Turkish heavy penal court for further proceedings.

The Maltese Court's Decision

In its judgment dated 13 February 2025 (Application No. 719/2020TA), the Civil Court (First Hall) of Malta, presided by Judge Toni Abela LL.D., denied enforcement of the $740 million (€659 million) Florida defamation judgment obtained by Mehmet Tatlici. The court grounded its refusal on unreasoned and incomplete nature of the Florida judgment, violations of Maltese ordre public, lack of jurisdiction, and broader free expression principles under Maltese and EU law.[14]

First, a critical basis for refusal was the failure to submit a full, reasoned version of the Florida judgment. The 740-million-dollar default judgment was a product of a single-page handwritten jury verdict form, devoid of any accompanying judicial opinion explaining the basis for the award.[15] The court highlighted that such a submission made it impossible to evaluate whether the judgment was consistent with Maltese public order and emphasized that reasoned judgments are not merely technical requirements but essential to meaningful judicial review.[16]

Procedural formalities, the court stated, are part of ordre public in Malta and cannot be waived, even with party consent. [17] This alone rendered the application unenforceable.

Significantly, this procedural deficiency mirrors difficulties Applicant Mehmet Tatlici is encountering in ongoing Turkish enforcement proceedings, where the Applicant has also been requested to provide a complete, authenticated copy of the Florida judgment.

Second, beyond procedural failings, the court strongly objected to the scale of damages—€659,932,000—awarded for defamation. It observed that such “stratospheric” sums are entirely incompatible with the way defamation is treated under Maltese law.[18] The court emphasized that while monetary penalties for defamation are permissible, they must not have a chilling effect on individual expression or public discourse.[19]

The court explicitly referenced the applicant’s own anticipation that the respondent might invoke a SLAPP (Strategic Lawsuit Against Public Participation) defence.[20] While Malta does not directly adjudicate the merits of U.S. legal standards, it emphasized that the chilling effect of such judgments—especially when arising from online speech—raises serious concerns under Maltese and European principles of democratic discourse. Crucially, the court did not make any finding as to whether Defendant Ugur Tatlici authored the allegedly defamatory material. It declined to engage with the underlying merits of the Florida judgment and limited itself to the enforceability of that decision under Maltese law.

Third, the court further held that it lacked jurisdiction under Article 742 of the Maltese Code of Organization and Civil Procedure[21]. The application failed to establish any sufficient nexus with Malta—either through residence, assets, or subject matter.[22]

Broader Analysis

The Tatlici decision highlights how courts in recognition proceedings are increasingly attentive to the substantive and procedural legitimacy of foreign default judgments—particularly in cases involving defamation, extraordinary damages, and minimal jurisdictional connection to the forum of origin. Rather than approaching enforcement as a purely formal exercise in judicial comity, the Maltese court subjected the Florida judgment to a rigorous public policy review, grounded in Maltese constitutional values and European legal standards.

This cautious approach is especially warranted in defamation matters, which remain a notoriously unsettled area of private international law. The Convention of 2 July 2019 on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Judgments in Civil or Commercial Matters, which aims to promote the mutual recognition and enforcement of civil and commercial judgments across borders, expressly excludes defamation claims from its scope under Article 2(1)(k). This exclusion is not incidental—it reflects the deep and enduring divergences between legal systems in balancing reputation and freedom of expression, and in regulating media liability, damage awards, and procedural safeguards.

As a result, defamation judgments—especially when obtained by default and accompanied by disproportionate damages—remain subject to domestic standards in the enforcing forum. The Tatlici ruling exemplifies how national courts can, and must, use that discretion to filter out foreign judgments that fail to meet local thresholds of proportionality and constitutional legitimacy.

In this respect, the case underlines a growing transatlantic divergence. Although the United States offers strong First Amendment protections in theory, its procedural system permits extraordinary libel damages, especially through default, without requiring the detailed judicial reasoning expected in civil-law jurisdictions. In Europe, by contrast, the enforcement of such awards is viewed not only as a matter of technical admissibility, but as a question of whether the judgment itself comports with core constitutional commitments—particularly the protection of democratic discourse and media freedom.

The Tatlici judgment sits comfortably alongside other recent European decisions—such as Real Madrid v. Le Monde^[23] in France and ZDF^[24] in Germany—which have refused to enforce even intra-EU defamation rulings where the outcome would infringe national free expression standards. These cases reflect the principle that domestic free expression standards must not be undermined by “importing” judgments from systems with differing legal thresholds.

The question of jurisdiction further reinforces the court’s reasoning. In both Tatlici and the New Zealand case Kea Investments Ltd v. Wikeley Family Trustee

Ltd^[25], the enforcing courts questioned the legitimacy of default judgments rendered in forums with no meaningful connection to the underlying dispute. In Tatlici, the Florida judgment was entered by default, despite both parties being Turkish nationals, with no substantial ties to Florida, and the disputed real estate project located in Istanbul. Similarly, in Kea, the Kentucky default judgment was obtained without adversarial process. Notably, while the New Zealand Court of Appeal ultimately lifted an anti-enforcement injunction on procedural grounds, it upheld the High Court's finding that the judgment had been fraudulently procured and was not entitled to recognition.^[26]

The Kea case offers a compelling comparative example, where the courts found a U.S. default judgment to be fraudulently obtained and not entitled to recognition, despite ultimately reversing an anti-enforcement injunction on procedural grounds.^[27] Though the injunction was lifted, the underlying concerns remained and reinforced the principle that fraudulently and strategically engineered default judgments cannot be presumed enforceable.^[28]

In both cases, the core issue is not hostility to foreign law, but resistance to opportunistic use of foreign legal systems to generate leverage in unrelated or parallel disputes. The Tatlici decision affirms that enforcement forums are not neutral venues for rubber-stamping foreign awards. They are guardians of legal coherence and public policy, tasked with ensuring that enforcement respects the procedural and constitutional identity of the local legal order.

Taken together, these themes point toward a developing global norm that recognition and enforcement of defamation judgments will continue to operate outside the harmonized legal frameworks of instruments like the Hague Judgements Convention—and rightly so. The reasons are structural, not incidental. As long as national systems take various positions on how to balance speech, reputation, and remedies, enforcement will remain subject to localized scrutiny, particularly when judgments are opaque, exorbitant, or jurisdictionally artificial.

Conclusion

While Malta has now delivered a clear repudiation of the Florida judgment on procedural and public policy grounds, the spotlight now shifts to Turkey, where enforcement proceedings remain ongoing, and a parallel criminal investigation is actively examining whether the judgment was procured through fraud. As the jurisdiction most closely connected to both parties and to the disputed commercial project at the heart of the defamation claim, Turkey is uniquely positioned to conduct a fuller legal inquiry—assuming the proceedings unfold independently and free from undue influence, unlike concerns raised in the Florida case.

The outcome of the Turkish proceedings may prove decisive—not only for the parties involved but also for evolving standards of cross-border enforceability. In this sense, Tatlici is a test of how national courts respond to foreign default judgments used strategically— and whether such judgments can withstand scrutiny in jurisdictions with stronger procedural safeguards and a more immediate interest in the truth.

[1] Mifsud Av. Malcolm Noe v. Ugor Tatlici, Civil Court (First Hall), Judgment of 13 February 2025, Application No. 719/2020TA. Available at: <https://ecourts.gov.mt/online services/Judgements/PrintPdf?JudgementId=0&CaseJudgementId=151468> (“Judgement”)

[2] ibid, at pp. 2-8.

[3] ibid, at p. 3.

[4] ibid, at p. 5.

[5] ibid.

[6] Istanbul 13th Civil Court of First Instance (File No. 2024/416 E.)

[7] Beykoz Chief Public Prosecutor’s Office, Case No. 2025/720 Sor.

[8] Istanbul Anadolu 8th Criminal Judgeship of Peace, File No. 2024/9316 Misc.

[9] Docket Entry no. 183, 184 and 185, Mehmet Tatlici v. Ugur Tatlici (Case No. 50-2018-CA-002361-XXXX-MB) (“Original Action”) available at: <https://appsgp.mypalmbeachclerk.com/eCaseView/search.aspx>

[10] ibid. Docket Entry no. 105.

[11] ibid.

[12] ibid.

[13] ibid.

[14] Judgement, at pp. 2–8.

[15] Original Action, Docket Entry no. 38.

[16] Judgement, at p.4.

[17] ibid.

[18] ibid. at p.5.

[19] ibid.

[20] ibid.

[21] ibid. at p.8.

[22] ibid.

[23] Real Madrid Club de Fútbol v. Le Monde, Case C-633/22, ECLI:EU:C:2024:843 (CJEU, 4 October 2024)

[24] Bundesgerichtshof (BGH) [Federal Court of Justice], Case IX ZB 10/18, Judgment of 19 July 2018.

[25] Wikeley v Kea Investments Ltd [2024] NZCA 609.

[26] ibid.

[27] ibid.

[28] ibid.

The Personal Status Regimes in the UAE – What’s New and What Are the Implications for Private International Law? A Brief Critical Appraisal

Prologue

On 15 April 2025, the new federal UAE law on personal status (Federal Decree Law No 41 of 14 October 2024) officially entered into force (“2024 PSL”). This law fully replaces the 2005 Federal Act on Personal Status (Federal Law No. 28 of 19 November 2005 as subsequently amended) (“2005 PSL”). The new law marks the latest step in the UAE remarkable wave of legal reforms, particularly regarding personal status matters. It follows a series of significant developments at both the federal and local levels. At the federal level, this includes the adoption of the law on Civil Personal Status (Federal Decree-Law No. 41 of 3 October 2022 on Civil Personal Status) (“2022 CPSL”) and its executive regulation. At the local level, specific legislations were adopted in the Emirate of Abu Dhabi, most notably the 2021 Law on Civil Marriages and its Effects (as subsequently amended) (“2021 ADCML”), and its Procedural Regulation. These legislative efforts collectively address what is commonly referred to as “civil family law” (for further details see previous posts on this blog here, here, here, and here). Together with the new 2024 PSL, these instruments will collectively be referred to as the “Family Law Regulations” (see Table below).

This overactive legislative activity has inevitably impacted on the articulation between the different legislative texts, both within the federal framework and between the federal and local levels. At the federal level, there is a need to consider the interaction between the 2024 PSL and the 2022 CPSL. At the intergovernmental level, this extends to the interplay between these two federal laws and the 2021 ADCML.

The icing on the cake - or perhaps the tipping point - is when private international law enters the equation. This is because the above family law regulations include provisions determining their scope of application, and in some cases allow for the application of foreign law under some conditions. This necessarily bring them into contact with the conflict of law rules contained in the 1985 Federal Act on Civil Transactions (Federal Law No. 5 of 21 March 1985, as subsequently amended) (“1985 FACT”).

Moreover, with the exception of the federal regulation on civil personal status, the other legislative texts also contain detailed rules on international jurisdiction. This leads to further interaction with the 2022 federal law on Civil Procedure (Federal Decree-Law No. 42 of 10 October 2022 on the Civil Procedure). This aspect, however, will not be addressed in this post. For a comparative overview of international jurisdiction in divorce matters, see my previous post here.

Table of relevant legislative texts:

Legislation	Federal level	Local Level
-------------	---------------	-------------

Family Law Regulations	Federal Decree-Law No. 41 of 3 October 2022 on Civil Personal Status (*) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Art. 1: Scope of application and applicability of foreign law • Art. 11(3): Possibility of applying foreign law in successions and wills? 	Abu Dhabi Law No. 14 of 7 November 2021 On Civil Marriage and its Effects in the Emirate of Abu Dhabi (as subsequently amended) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Art. 3: Direct application of the law • Art. 11(3): Possibility of application of foreign law in matters of successions and wills • Art. 17bis: International jurisdiction Procedural regulation (Resolution No. (8) of 1 February 2022 concerning the Marriage and Civil Divorce Procedures in the Emirate of Abu Dhabi) <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Art. 4: International jurisdiction (confusingly referred to as territorial jurisdiction in the Regulation) • Art. 5: Scope of application adjud.gov.ae/.../regulation 8 2022 family law.pdf
	Federal Decree Law No 41 of 14 October 2024 on Personal Status <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Art. 1: Scope of application and applicability of foreign law • Arts. 3 and 4: International jurisdiction
Private International law	Federal Decree-Law No. 42 of 10 October 2022 on the Civil Procedure <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Arts. 19 - 23: International jurisdictions Federal Law No. 5 of 21 March 1985 on Civil Transactions <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Arts. 10 - 28: Conflict of laws rules

(*) One of the unresolved questions is whether the 2022 CPSL also applies in Abu Dhabi—at least in a way that would override the provisions of the Abu Dhabi Law that are inconsistent with the federal legislation. This aspect is briefly addressed below.

It must be acknowledged that the current framework is highly complex, marked with multiple layers of interaction, and at times, inconsistencies and unresolved questions. The aim of this short post is simply to highlight these difficulties, particularly those relating to the scope of application and the interplay with choice of law rules, leaving a more-in-depth analysis for another occasion.

I. Innovations and clarifications

1. Scope of application

One of the most significant innovations introduced by the new 2024 PSL is its clear delineation of its scope of application, particularly in relation to the other foundational law, that is the 2022 CPSL. Indeed, the latter has already defined its scope by limiting its application to family law matters between non-Muslims, whether nationals or foreigners. Accordingly, it can be inferred that 2024 PSL limits its scope to family law matters involving Muslims. This is explicitly stated in respect of family relations involving UAE citizens. As for non-citizens, since family relations of foreign non-Muslims are primarily governed by the 2022 CPSL, the reference to “non-UAE citizen” in 2024 PSL should be understood as referring to “foreign Muslims”.

2024 PSL	2022 CPSL
Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (1) The provisions of this Law shall apply to UAE citizens if both parties of the relationship or one of them is Muslim.	Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (1) The provisions of this Decree-Law shall apply to non-Muslims who are national citizens of the United Arab Emirates, and to non-Muslim foreigners residing in the state [...]

Art. 1 [Scope of Application]:
(3) The provisions of this Law shall apply to non-UAE citizens [...]

(*) All translations are based on the officially adopted versions, with modifications made where necessary. Own underlines and Italics.

2. Parties’ agreement

Another point worth highlighting is that both federal personal status laws contain provisions suggesting that a certain degree of party autonomy is permitted. However, the extent of this autonomy remains unclear. This issue will be discussed below.

2024 PSL	2022 CPSL
Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (2) The provisions of this Law apply to non-Muslim UAE citizens unless [...] they agree to apply another law permitted by the legislation in force in the State.	Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (2) The persons governed by the provisions of this Decree-Law ... may agree to apply other legislation regulating the family or personal status matters currently in force in the State instead of applying the provisions of this Decree-Law.
Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (3) The provisions of this Law shall apply to non-UAE citizens unless [...] any other law that has been agreed to be applied, as permitted by the legislation in force in the State.

3. Possibility of applying foreign law

Finally, like the 2022 CPSL and the now-repealed 2005 PSL, the 2024 PSL also allows for the application of foreign law. What is particularly noteworthy, however, is that the formulation originally found in the repealed 2005 PSL was not reproduced in the newly adopted 2024 PSL, despite its inclusion – albeit with some modifications – in the 2022 CPSL (see the underlined portion below). The reasons for this divergence remain unclear.

2024 Personal Status Law	2022 Civil Personal Status Law
Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (3) The provisions of this Law shall apply to non-UAE citizens unless one of them invokes the application of his law [...] (*)	Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (1) The provisions of this Decree-Law shall apply to non-Muslims who are national citizens of the United Arab Emirates, and to non-Muslim foreigners residing in the state, unless one of them invokes the application of his law, with regard to matters of marriage, divorce, successions, wills, and establishment of filiation, without prejudice to the provisions of Articles (12), (13), (15), (16), and (17) of the Federal Law No. (5) of 1985[on Civil Transactions] ().

(*) The Gender biased formulations found in the original texts are maintained.

() Art. 1(3) of the now-repealed 2005 PSL stated as follows: “The provisions of this Law shall apply to non-UAE citizens, unless one of them invokes the application of his law, without prejudice to the provisions of Articles (12), (13), (15), (16), (17), (27) and (28) of the Federal Law No. (5) of 1985 on Civil Transactions”.

The numbered articles concern respectively, conflict of law rules in matters of marriages (12), divorce (13), maintenance (15), guardianship and other institutions of protection of persons with limited capacity and absentees (16), successions and wills (17), as well as public policy (27) and failure to prove foreign law (28).

II. Ambiguities and persistent problems

1. Ambiguities

a) Scope of application

i) The 2021 ADCML and its 2022 Procedural Regulation

One of the most crucial points concerns the relationship between federal and local laws. As previously mentioned, the Emirate of Abu Dhabi took the initiative in 2021 by enacting its “Law on Civil Marriage and Its Effects”. This law – originally titled the “Personal Status Law of Non-Muslim Foreigners” – defined its scope of application in a more restrictive manner compared to the 2022 CPSL. While the latter applies to both foreign and local non-Muslims, the 2021 Abu Dhabi law was limited, as its title suggests, to foreign non-Muslim only.

2021 ADCML (before amendment)	2022 CPSL
Art. 1 [Definitions]: Foreigner: Any male or female non-Muslim foreigner , having a domicile, residence or place of work in the Emirate.	Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (1) The provisions of this Decree-Law shall apply to non-Muslims who are national citizens of the United Arab Emirates , and to non-Muslim foreigners residing in the state [...]
Civil Marriage: A union that is intended to be of indefinite duration according to the provisions of this Law, between a foreign man and woman, both non-Muslim .

Only a few weeks after its adoption, the 2021 ADCML was amended. Notably, in addition to the change of the title as mentioned above, all references to “foreigners” and “foreign non-Muslims” were replaced with the more neutral phrase of “persons covered by the provisions of this law”. Moreover, new jurisdictional rules were adopted (Art. 17bis). Despite this amendment, and somewhat surprisingly, the amended law does not only define “persons covered by the provisions of this law” in an ambiguous manner (see some critical comments here), but also it continues to define civil marriage as union “between a foreign man and woman, both non-Muslim”. This has reinforced the impression that both the original law and its subsequent amendments were enacted without thorough consideration of their internal consistency or of the broader legal context in which they would operate.

2021 ADCML (after amendment)

Art. 1 [Definitions]:

Civil Marriage: A union that is intended to be of indefinite duration according to the provisions of this Law, between a foreign man and woman, both non-Muslim.

Persons covered by the provisions of this law: Foreigners and Nationals, non-Muslims, whether male or female. (*)

(*) The original ambiguity in the formulation is maintained in purpose.

In 2022, a Procedural Regulation ("2022 Procedural Regulation") was adopted with the intention of clarifying, inter alia, the scope and application of the 2021 ADCML. However, this instrument has introduced more inconsistencies and ambiguities than it has resolved. This is particularly evident with regard to the definition of "civil marriage", as well as the ratione personae and ratione materiae of both the 2021 ADCML and its accompanying 2022 Procedural Regulation.

Abu Dhabi 2021 Law (after amendment)	The 2022 Procedural Regulation
Art. 1 [Definitions]: Civil Marriage: A union that is intended to be of indefinite duration according to the provisions of this Law, between a foreign man and woman, both non-Muslim.	Art. 1 [Definitions]: Civil Marriage: Marriage that is concluded and registered under statutory laws and regulations, without taking into account of any particular religious law.

Persons covered by the provisions of this law: Foreigners and Nationals, non-Muslims, whether male or female	Persons covered by the provisions of this law: Foreigners and non-Muslims Nationals, whether male or female Article 5 (Persons covered by the provisions of this law): The provisions of this law govern civil marriages and their effects, as well as all matters concerning the civil family according to the following cases: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1) Non-Muslim citizens 2) A foreigner who holds the nationality of a country that does not primarily apply rules of Islamic Sharia in matters of personal status [...] In the case of multiple nationalities, the nationality to be taken into account shall be the one used based on the person's status of residence in the State. 3) Where the marriage is concluded in a country that does not primarily apply rules of Islamic Sharia in matters of personal status [....] 4) Where the marriage is concluded in accordance with the provisions of civil marriage. 5) Any other case for which a decision is issued by the Head of the Department.
--	---

Problems of interpretation and application generated by the ambiguities and inconsistencies of the 2021 ADCML and its 2022 Procedural Regulations have already been addressed on this blog (see here, here, and here). These issues particularly concern the application of these instruments to foreign Muslims, a possibility permitted under the 2021 ADCML and its 2022 Procedural Regulations as confirmed by recent case law, but not allowed under the 2022 CPSL.

ii) Constitutional implications

Given the differing scopes of application, a crucial issue has arisen: whether the 2022 CPSL overrides the local law in this respect. In other words, does the Federal Civil Personal Status Law also apply in Abu Dhabi?

From a constitutional perspective, the answer should be affirmative (see Article 151 of the Federal Constitution). However, the issue remains largely unresolved. In practice, lower courts in Abu Dhabi appear to give little weight to the federal law, applying the local law and its regulations instead. (The Abu Dhabi Supreme Court seems to follow a slightly different approach, as on some occasions it cited the 2022 Federal Law on Civil Personal Status. For examples, previous posts here, and here).

iii) Impact of the 2024 PSL

The situation, however, changes significantly with the adoption of the 2024 PSL. It is undisputed that this new federal law applies in Abu Dhabi as well. The absence of any local regulation on personal status (other than the 2021 ADCML and its 2022 Procedural Regulation) makes the application of the new federal law self-evident. Therefore, even if one were to argue (for the sake of discussion) that the 2022 CPSL does not apply in Abu Dhabi, it will still be necessary to observe how Abu Dhabi courts will reconcile the new law, which explicitly applies to Muslims (regardless of their nationality or whether their country of origin applies Islamic sharia in personal status matters), with the existing local regulations. A typical case would be a Muslim couple from Europe or elsewhere where Islamic Sharia does not primarily apply in matters of personal status, or Muslims from Muslim jurisdictions who got married under the 2021 ADCML, but then one of the parties claims the application of the 2024 PSL because they are Muslim, and therefore subject to the federal and not local law.

b) The Parties' agreement

As mentioned above, both federal laws allow the parties to “agree” to apply “another law permitted by the legislation” (2024 PSL) or “other legislation regulating family or personal status matters” currently in force in the UAE (2022 CPSL). The formulations used here are highly problematic, as their exact meaning remains unclear.

For instance, it is unclear, whether the phrase “legislation in force” includes also local laws, notably the 2021 ADCML. Assuming that the 2022 CPSL does not override the 2021 ADCML, could parties residing in Dubai agree to apply it? This remains unresolved.

Moreover, an open question also concerns the form that such an agreement must take. Is an explicit agreement required, e.g., one that is formally recorded in the marriage contract? Or can consent be implied, such that a party's reliance on the provisions of a given law is sufficient to infer tacit agreement?

Finally, and more importantly, it is not clear whether “non-UAE citizens” under the 2024 PSL, which applies primarily to Muslims (see above), would be allowed to choose the application non-Muslim law. While this can be somewhat “tolerated” in matters of marriage or divorce as the practice now in Abu Dhabi clearly shows (see previous post here, although the boundaries of such “tolerance” remains certainly unclear notably in other Emirates. From a broader perspective, see examples cited in Bélih Elbalti, “The Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Filiation Judgments in Arab Countries”, in Nadjma Yassari et al. (eds.), Filiation and the Protection of Parentless Children (T.M.C. Asser Press, 2019), 397), such a possibility seems to be inconceivable in matters of successions, giving the longstanding position of UAE courts to consider that the Federal Personal Status Law – which is largely based on Islamic Sharia – should apply whenever one of the parties (the deceased or the heir) is Muslim (for detailed analyses and overview of applicable case law, see Bélih Elbalti, “Applicable Law in Succession Matters in the MENA Arab Jurisdictions – Special Focus on Interfaith Successions and Difference of Religion as Impediment to Inheritance”, 88(4) RabelsZ 2024 748, 751).

2. Persistent problems

Two are particularly relevant here, both concern (a) the applicability of foreign law, and (b) the interplay of the family law regulations with private international law.

a) Applicability of foreign law

A key difference between the 2021 ADCML and the 2022 CPSL (as well as the 2024 PSL) lies in the fact that the former excludes the very application of foreign law, rendering the 2021 ADCML directly and automatically applicable in all disputes that enter into its scope of application (it must be acknowledged, however, that a recent Abu Dhabi Supreme Court's ruling suggests otherwise. Upon examination, though, the Court's reference to choice of law rules does not have any tangible implication on the above stated conclusion). The only exception concerns matters of succession and wills, for which, a reference to choice of law rules is explicitly provided for within the law itself.

2021 ADCML (after amendment)	2022 CPSL
Article 3 [Scope of Application] (*) (): (1) If the marriage is concluded in accordance with this law, it shall be the applicable law governing the effects of the marriage and its dissolution. (2) This law shall apply to wills and succession matters concerning persons subject to its provisions, provided that the estate or the bequeathed property is located within the State.	Art. 1 [Scope of Application]: (1) The provisions of this Decree-Law shall apply to non-Muslims who are national citizens of the United Arab Emirates, and to non-Muslim foreigners residing in the state, unless one of them invokes the application of his law, with regard to matters of marriage, divorce, successions, wills, and establishment of filiation [...]

Article 11 [Distribution of Estate]: (3) Notwithstanding paragraph (2) of this Article [testate succession], any heir of the foreign deceased may request the application of the law governing the estate in accordance with the provisions of [1985 FACT], unless a registered will provides otherwise.	Article 11 [Distribution of Estate]: (3) Notwithstanding paragraph (2) of this Article [testate succession], any heir of the foreign deceased may request the application of the law governing the estate in accordance with the provisions of [1985 FACT], unless a registered will provides otherwise.
---	---

() It is worth noting that article 3 in its original form was similar to that of Article of the 2022 CPSL. It stated as follows: “Unless the foreigner requests the application of their national law, the court shall apply this law to foreigners in matters relating to marriage, divorce, inheritance, wills, and the establishment of parentage.”*

() See also Article 5 of the Procedural Regulation cited above.

This does not only give rise to problems of inconsistency with the federal personal status laws, but also with the 1985 FACT.

b) Interplay with choice of law rules

This is arguably the main issue that remains unresolved despite the various reforms and amendments. As mentioned above, the federal laws allow “one of the parties” to invoke the application of “his law”. Theoretically, if properly invoked, the foreign law would apply instead of the federal provisions. However, this possibility raises three core issues:

- 1) who is exactly meant by “one of the parties” (ahadihim)?
- 2) what is meant by “his law” (qanunihi), and

3) what is the current relevance of choice of law rules governing family matters as set out in the 1985 FACT?

i) Meaning of “one of the parties”

Regarding 1), there is a range of diverging opinions. For instance, the Explanatory Report of the now-repealed 2005 PSL referred to the “adversary party” (al-khasm). Certain strands in literature, contra legem, suggest that this concerns any party, but only when both of them share the same nationality. Case law, however, reveals more diverse scenarios: courts addressed the issue of the application of foreign law regardless of whether the parties hold the same nationality or not, and when the foreign is invoked by any of them. Yet, to the best of our knowledge, UAE courts have not provided a definitive answer to this question, often focusing instead on whether the party’s claim could be accepted or not.

ii) The Meaning of “his law”

Regarding 2), case law has largely clarified that “his law” refers to the lex patriae. Still, ambiguity remains in cases involving parties of different nationalities. Prior to 2020, the main connecting factor in matters of marriage and its dissolution was the lex patriae of the husband. It was thus unclear whether the wife could invoke the application of “her law” or whether she should claim the application of the lex patriae of her husband, when the latter based his claim on UAE law. In any case, where a party holds multiple nationalities, Article 24 (still in force) states that the lex fori (UAE law) shall apply.

However, in 2020, an amendment to the 1985 FACT introduced significant changes, shifting away from lex patriae as the main connecting factor in personal status. Particularly, articles 12 and 13 dealing respectively with marriage and its dissolution now refer to lex loci celebrationis. Moreover, Article 17 dealing with successions and wills grants considerable weight to professio juris, allowing a person in testate successions to designate the law that shall govern their estate. These changes have further deepened the discrepancy between the federal personal status regulations and the choice of law provisions contained in the 1985

FACT.

iii) Relevance of choice of law rules Regarding 3), as a result of what was stated above, resolving conflicts of law and coordinating the application of the various legislative instruments has become particularly difficult without significantly stretching the wording, and arguably, the intended meaning of the law. This difficulty is especially evident when the lex loci celebrationis differs from the parties' lex patriae.

Article 1(2) of the 2022 CPSL offers somehow better articulation by including a two-part clause: “unless one of the parties invoke the application of his law, without prejudice to the provisions of Articles (12), (13), (15), (16), and (17)” of the 1985 FACT. Nevertheless, this articulation becomes problematic when both parties share the same nationality but have concluded their marriage abroad.

In any case, both laws remains silent on the consequences of the parties invoking his lex patriae when it conflicts with the law designated under the conflict of laws rules included in the 1985 FACT.

Epilogue

In practice, these theoretical complexities are often resolved in a far more radical and pragmatic way: foreign law is rarely applied, even when validly invoked by one or both parties.

It is against this backdrop that one can understand the rationale behind the adoption of civil family law regimes and the recent adoption of the 2024 PSL: rather than refining the existing conflict-of-law mechanisms, these instruments aim to sidestep them altogether by offering a self-contained and directly applicable alternative.