

Conference: The new European Choice-of-Law Revolution - Lessons for the United States?

On Saturday 9th February 2008, Duke University School of Law will host  an international conference entitled, "The New European Choice-of-Law Revolution: Lessons for the United States." Here's the blurb:

In a globalizing world of interdependent legal systems, determining which laws apply to international private transactions is crucial. Choice of Law, the field that deals with these questions, was once so vibrant in the U.S. that we spoke of a veritable choice-of-law-revolution in the sixties and seventies. At that time, Europeans watched, with a mixture of fascination and disdain, these developments at the forefront of scholarship in this field.

Now, the pendulum has swung. The field is in a crisis in the United States, unattractive to scholars, and disliked by courts. By contrast, it is thriving in Europe. The most important choice-of-law questions are being addressed wholesale in the European Union. Rules are being unified in Europe-wide codifications, especially two regulations promulgated in 2007 and 2008 dealing with contractual and non-contractual obligations, respectively. The European Court of Justice is rendering important decisions and academics are engaging in active discussions and debates.

After the American choice-of-law revolution in the sixties and seventies, are we now observing a new European choice-of-law revolution? Can European developments incite reforms and rekindle excitement in the U.S., as earlier American developments incited reforms in Europe? Alternatively, are European developments a model of how things should not be done?

This conference brings together leading scholars from both the United States and Europe to engage in debate and comparative examination of approaches taken in Europe and the United States, with an eye towards renewing interest here in the United States. Methodological issues to be discussed include, federalization of choice of law, choice of law as an instrument of market regulation and methodological approaches. Substantive issues include choice of law in family, tort, contract, and corporate law. There will be ample time for the panelists to field questions and discuss these issues with those attending.

Sponsored by Duke University Center for International & Comparative Law in collaboration with the Tulane Law Review. Students are encouraged to attend.

The programme:

Saturday, February 9, 2008

Registration and Continental Breakfast 8:30 – 9:00

Welcome and Opening Remarks 9:00 – 9:15

Dean David Levi (Duke Law School)

Ralf Michaels (Center for International and Comparative Law)

Haller Jackson (Tulane Law Review)

Part I - Specific Areas of Law

Contract and Tort Law 9:15 – 10:45

Panelists:

Patrick Borchers, Professor of Law, Vice-President for Academic Affairs,
Creighton University School of Law

Jan von Hein, Professor of Law, Universität Trier

Dennis Solomon, Professor of Law, Universität Tübingen

Symeon Symeonides, Professor of Law, Dean, Willamette College of Law

Family Law 11:00 – 12:15

Panelists:

Katharina Boele-Woelki, Professor of Law, Universiteit Utrecht

Marta Pertegás, Associate Professor International Private Law, Universiteit
Antwerpen

Linda Silberman, Martin Lipton Professor of Law, New York University School of Law

Lunch Break: 12:15-13:30

Corporate Law 13:30 – 14:45

Panelists:

Larry Catá Backer, Professor of Law, Penn State Dickinson School of Law, Visiting
Professor of Law, Tulane University Law School

Jens Dammann, Assistant Professor of Law, University of Texas School of Law
Onnig Dombalagian, Associate Professor of Law, Tulane University Law School

Part II -Methodology

Methods and Approaches 14:45 – 16:15

Moderator: TBA

Panelists:

Richard Fentiman, Solicitor, Reader in Private International Law, University of Cambridge Faculty of Law

Ralf Michaels, Professor of Law, Duke University School of Law

William A. Reppy Jr., Charles L. B. Lowndes Emeritus Professor of Law, Duke University School of Law

William M. Richman, Professor of Law, The University of Toledo College of Law

Internal and External Conflicts, Federalism and Market Regulation 16:30 – 18:00

Panelists:

Mathias W. Reimann, Hessel E. Yntema Professor of Law, University of Michigan Law School

Jürgen Basedow, Professor of Law, Max Planck Institute for Comparative and International Private Law

Horatia Muir Watt, Professor of Law, Université Paris I, Panthéon-Sorbonne

Erin O'Hara, Professor of Law, Vanderbilt University Law School

Larry Ribstein, Mildred Van Voorhis Jones Chair in Law, University of Illinois College of Law

Closing Discussion: 18:00 – 18:30

More information can be found on the conference website.

New Law on International

Adoption in Spain

The Spanish Parliament has adopted a new statute on international adoption on 28 December 2007.

Professor Alegría Borrás reports on the site of the French Society of Comparative Legislation (in French).

The Spanish text can be found here.

Article Challenges Canadian Approach to Jurisdiction

Professor Tanya Monestier of Queen's University has published an article challenging the approach in some of the leading cases, including Muscutt v. Courcelles, to the taking of jurisdiction over defendants outside the forum: see Tanya J. Monestier, "A 'Real and Substantial' Mess: The Law of Jurisdiction in Canada" (2007) 33 Queen's L.J. 179 (available to those with access to a database containing this journal).

Professor Monestier argues that "By superimposing onto the jurisdictional framework a multiplicity of considerations that are unrelated to the connection between the forum and the action, Muscutt has essentially transformed the question of whether a court can hear a case (jurisdiction simpliciter) into the question of whether a court should hear a case (forum non conveniens)."

In her conclusions Professor Monestier stresses the importance of certainty in the jurisdictional inquiry and argues, in the (in)famous language of Tolofson v. Jensen, for "order" over "fairness".

New French Books on the Conflict of Laws

For long, scholars interested in the French conflict of laws had to refer to a few traditional books, in particular the treaty of Batiffol and Lagarde (8th edition 1993), but also the manuals of Loussouarn and Bourel (9th edition 2007, with professor Pascal de Vareilles-Sommières), of Pierre Mayer (9th edition 2007, with professor Vincent Heuzé), and of Bernard Audit (3rd edition 2006).

In 2005 and in 2007, three new books covering the whole field of conflicts have enriched French private international law. They all bear the title Droit International Privé.

The first was published in 2005 by professor Thierry Vignal, who lectures at Cergy-Pontoise University. The publisher is Armand Colin.

The second was published in 2007 by professor Marie-Laure Niboyet and professor Geraud de Geouffre de la Pradelle, who lecture at Paris X (Nanterre) University. The publisher is LGDJ.

The third was published in 2007 by professor Dominique Bureau, who lectures at Paris II (Panthéon-Assas) University, and professor Horatia Muir Watt, who lectures at Paris I (Panthéon-Sorbonne) University. The publisher is PUF.

Guest Editorial: Dickinson on Trust and Confidence in the European Community Supreme Court?

Throughout 2008, CONFLICT OF LAWS .NET will play host to twelve guest editors: distinguished scholars and practitioners in private international law, who have been invited to write a short article on a subject of their choosing. It is hoped that these guest editorials will provide a forum for discussion and debate on some of the key issues currently in the conflicts world, and I would very much encourage everyone to post comments.

The first editorial is on “Trust and Confidence in the European Community Supreme Court?” by Andrew Dickinson.

Andrew Dickinson is a practising solicitor advocate (England and Wales)  and consultant to Clifford Chance LLP. He is also a Visiting Fellow in Private International Law at the British Institute of International and Comparative Law. Andrew is the co-author of State Immunity: Selected Materials and Commentary (OUP, 2004) and an editor of the International Commercial Litigation Handbook (LexisNexis, 2006). He has written widely in the areas of private and public international law – recently published papers include “Third-Country Mandatory Rules in the Law Applicable to Contractual Obligations: So Long, Farewell, Auf Wiedersehen, Adieu?” (2007) 3 J Priv Int L 53 and “Legal Certainty and the Brussels Convention – Too Much of a Good Thing?”, ch 6 in P de Vareilles-Sommières (ed), Forum Shopping in the European Judicial Area (Hart Publishing, 2007).

Trust and Confidence in the European Community Supreme Court

Under Article 10 of the EC Treaty, the relations between the Member States and the Community institutions are governed by a principle of loyal co-operation (Case C-275/00 Commission v First NV [2002] ECR I-10943, para 49). In the area of private international law, now within Title IV of the EC Treaty, that principle has manifested itself in the relationship of mutual trust between Member States’ judicial systems in the application of the Brussels I Regulation and its predecessor Convention (Opinion 1/03, Lugano Convention [2006] ECR I-1145, para 163; Case C-159/02 Turner v Grovit [2004] ECR I-3565, para 72). To a certain degree, that relationship is, of course, a fiction. Some Member State courts are unwilling to trust certain of their continental cousins, whose reputation (deserved or undeserved) precedes them. Others are wholly undeserving of the fiduciary responsibility (see Case C-7/98, Krombach v Bamberski [2000] ECR I-1935).

Importantly, however, the principle of loyal co-operation not only requires the Member States to take all measures necessary to ensure the application and effectiveness of Community law, but also imposes on the Community institutions reciprocal duties of sincere co-operation with the Member States (Commission v First NV, above). Accordingly, a relationship of “common trust” supposedly exists between the Member States, on the one hand, and the European Court of Justice, on the other, in the performance of the latter’s primary function in ensuring that in the interpretation and application of the treaty the law is observed (EC Treaty, Art 220). In this connection, the question arises: “Is the Court of Justice really deserving of our trust?”

Three reasons, in particular, justify hesitation before giving an affirmative answer to that question. The first concerns the judicial, administrative, financial and procedural resources available to the Court. The current restriction on the number of judges and Advocates-General under the EC Treaty (Arts 221-222) inevitably restricts the number of cases that can be heard, particularly if (as is currently the case) the procedural rules entitle intervention by other interested parties and require a fixed, multi-layered procedure to be followed (ECJ Statute, Arts 20 and 23). Further, as the President of the Court of Justice has noted “the accelerated procedure laid down under Article 104a of the Rules of Procedure of the Court is not suited for dealing adequately with a high number of references for a preliminary ruling in areas such as visas, asylum and immigration, or judicial co-operation in civil and criminal matters” (see Council document 11759/1/07 REV 1 (en), p 3).

The result, inevitably, is delay in the administration of justice, a delay which is all the more important in situations in which the private rights and obligations of natural and legal persons are directly at stake. By way of example, of the four decisions of the ECJ in 2006 concerning the Brussels Convention, two (Case C-4/03, GAT and Case C-539/03, Roche Nederland) had been referred to the ECJ in 2003. Little wonder, therefore, that a reference to the Court is seen in some quarters as a useful way to gum up proceedings (a “Luxembourg torpedo”, perhaps) and focus the claimant’s mind on settlement.

Happily, the ECJ has itself on more than one occasion taken the initiative in proposing amendments to its statute and rules to create a more streamlined and flexible procedure for certain references for a preliminary ruling in the area of freedom, security and justice (see Council documents 13272/06; 17013/06; 11597/1/07 REV 1 (en); 11824/07). Unfortunately, it appears that the Council and the Member States have yet to act on that initiative.

The second reason concerns the expertise of the Court in matters of private law, and private international law in particular. Thus, the potted biographies of the current members of the Court appearing on the curia website suggest that significantly less than half have any experience of private practice. Unsurprisingly, the background of most lies in the areas of public and European law, and only two CVs (those of the judges from Slovenia and Romania) refer to private international law. This suggests a significant imbalance, particularly given the increasing prominence of “private law” instruments in the Community acquis.

The third reason, arguably the most troubling, concerns the unfavourable impression given by the Court’s reasoning in recent cases in this area, particularly those concerning the European jurisdiction instruments. Thus, the Court has appeared unconcerned by arguments raised concerning encouragement of abusive practices by litigants (Turner, above, para 53) and consequential difficulties in the due administration of justice (Case C-281/02, Owusu v Jackson [2005] ECR I-1383, paras 44-45). Suffice it to observe, to use one of the ECJ’s favoured expressions, it is not so much the fact that these arguments were rejected as the manner in which the Court curtly swept them under the carpet. More recently, in Case C-98/06, Freeport v Arnoldsson (10 November 2007), the ECJ refused to acknowledge the doubts which it had generated through a careless (and unnecessary) comment in its judgment in its earlier decision in the Réunion case ([1998] ECR I-6511, para 50), seeking instead to explain away the comment on an implausible basis (see here for the discussion on this website). Had the Court said “we went further than both the decision and the terms of the 1968 Convention required” or even “we went further than the decision required and we can see why it has caused confusion and dissatisfaction in some quarters”, its decision in Freeport would not have raised doubts. By deploying a judicial sleight of hand, however, the Court calls into question, once again, whether it is deserving of our common trust as the arbiter of an increasingly broad civil justice regime under EC law.

Like the principle of mutual trust in other Member State courts which the ECJ has emphasised, it is a fiduciary relationship from which the “beneficiaries” are not free to withdraw. But the importance of the Court’s role in our personal and professional lives is too important to allow the re-writing of history to pass without remark, particularly at a time when the ECJ is likely to exercise an increasingly significant role in the area of private law, as a result both of the recent tide of legislation under Title IV (the legacy of the rush to exercise competences created by the Treaty of Amsterdam and the Commission’s scoreboard turning activity in the early years of this century) and the intended removal by the Reform Treaty of the restrictions (currently, EC Treaty, Art 68) on the right of lower Member State courts to refer cases for preliminary ruling on a question of EC law. Improvements in the Court’s procedural rules (see above) may address some of the problems, but it is submitted that a more fundamental institutional reform is required. One option, which may merit further thought (and on which comments would be welcomed) would be to create a specialist “civil and commercial court” using the power conferred by Art 225a [256, post-Reform Treaty], with specifically tailored procedures and judges chosen for their expertise in, and sensitivity to, private law issues and the resolution of disputes between private parties. Absent reform of this kind, Europe’s supreme court may acquire a reputation as a court of injustice, not of Justice.

(The February Guest Editorial will be by Professor Jonathan Harris; details to follow.)

Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2007: Twenty-First Annual Survey

With the start of a new year, and the concomitant end of an old one, comes  the twenty-first instalment of Symeon Symeonides’ annual survey of US decisions relating to choice-of-law issues. It is, as always, both a rigorous piece of research and an excellent resource. Here's the abstract:

This is the Twenty-First Annual Survey of American Choice-of-Law Cases. It covers cases decided by American state or federal courts from January 1 to December 31, 2007, and reported during the same period. Of the 3,676 conflicts cases meeting both of these parameters, the Survey focuses on the cases that deal with the choice-of-law part of conflicts law, and then discusses those cases that may add something new to the development or understanding of that part. The Survey is intended as a service to fellow teachers and students of conflicts law, both within and outside the United States. Its purpose is to inform rather than to advocate. The following are among the cases reviewed in the Survey:

*A California Supreme Court decision involving recordings of cross border communications and another California case raising issues of cross-border discrimination in managing a web site; a product-liability decision of the New Jersey Supreme Court backtracking from its earlier pro-plaintiff decisions, and several other cases continuing to apply the pro-defendant law of the victim's home state and place of injury; several cases arising out of the events of September 11, 2001, and a few cases involving claims of torture (by them and us); the first guest statute conflict in years, as well as a case eerily similar to Schultz v. Boy Scouts of America, Inc.; two cases in which foreign plaintiffs succeeded, and many more cases in which US plaintiffs failed, to obtain certification of a nationwide class action; a case involving alienation of affections and one involving palimony between non-cohabitants; several cases involving deadly combinations of choice-of-law, choice-of-forum, and arbitration clauses; three cases involving the paternity or maternity of children born after artificial insemination, in three different combinations (known sperm donor, unknown sperm donor, and unknown egg donor); a case involving the child of a Vermont civil union and holding that DOMA does not trump the Parental Kidnapping Prevention Act; a case involving the constitutionality of a Missouri statute affecting out-of-state abortions of Missouri minors; and one US Supreme Court decision allowing federal courts to dismiss on forum non conveniens grounds without first affirming their jurisdiction, and another decision exonerating Microsoft from patent infringement charges arising from partly foreign conduct.*

The survey is available to download, free of charge, from here. Highly recommended.

West Tankers, and Worldwide Freezing Orders

There are two casenotes in the new issue of the Cambridge Law Journal worthy of mention. Firstly, Richard Fentiman (Cambridge) has written on “Arbitration and the Brussels Regulation” – discussing the recent House of Lords decision (and reference to the ECJ) in West Tankers Inc v. RAS – Ras Riunione di Sicurata SpA [2007] UKHL 4. The introduction reads:

WHEN, if at all, may English courts restrain claimants from suing in other Member States? The European Court of Justice has declared such relief to be inconsistent with the principle of mutual trust embodied in Regulation 44/2201, governing jurisdiction in national courts: Case C-281/02 Turner v. Grovit [2004] ECR I – 3565. But when does the Regulation engage, so that the ban imposed in Turner applies? Perhaps it does so whenever the foreign proceedings are within the Regulation’s material scope. If so, civil proceedings in the courts of Member States can never be restrained. Alternatively, perhaps the Regulation only engages when it governs jurisdiction in both the foreign and the English proceedings. Judicial proceedings in other Member States could thus be restrained, provided relief is sought in English proceedings beyond the Regulation’s reach.

Louise Merrett (Cambridge) has written a note on “Worldwide Freezing Orders in Europe” (C.L.J. 2007, 66(3), 495-498). Here’s the abstract:

Examines the Court of Appeal decision in Banco Nacional de Comercio Exterior SNC v Empresa de Telecomunicaciones de Cuba SA on whether the court had jurisdiction under Regulation 44/2001 Art.47 (Brussels Regulation) or the Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982 s.25 to grant a worldwide freezing order over the defendant's assets where it was not connected to, nor resident in, England and the court had no jurisdiction over the subject matter of the proceedings.

Available to subscribers (both online and in print).

The Long-Arm of the USPTO: A Significant Decision (and a Significant Dissent) from the Fourth Circuit

When panel issues a 16-page decision, and Judge James Harvie Wilkinson III writes a 20-page dissent, people seem to take notice. In Rosenruist-Gestao E servicos LDA v. Virgin Enterprises Ltd., No. 06-1588 (4th Cir., December 27, 2007), Judge Wilkinson sharply derided his colleagues in holding that:

“a foreign company that has no United States employees, locations or business activities must produce a designee to testify at a deposition in the Eastern District of Virginia so long as it has applied for a trademark registration with a government office located there. As a result, foreign witnesses can be compelled to travel to the United States and give in-person testimony at the behest of any litigant in a trademark dispute, . . . even though the PTO's own procedures call for obtaining testimony from foreign companies through [the Hague Evidence Convention].”

This decision is, as Judge Wilkinson recognizes, “a first for any federal court,” and “problematic for many reasons.” Specifically:

It fails to properly apply the statute, 35 U.S.C. § 24, that is directly relevant to its decision, and it reaches a result that is bound to embroil foreign trademark applicants in lengthy, procedurally complex proceedings. It inverts longstanding canons of construction that seek to protect against international discord, and it disregards the views of the PTO whose proceedings 35 U.S.C. § 24 is designed to aid. In view of the statutory text (see Section I), interpretive canons, international relationships, and separation of powers concerns (II), and the PTO's own framework (III), I firmly believe this subpoena must be quashed.

The decision can be obtained here. One cannot help but wonder whether the significance and recurrence of the issue doesn't warrant immediate Supreme Court review of the decision, even absent a clear split of circuit authority. Indeed, as Judge Wilkinson implicitly acknowledges, such a split may never occur; "the majority creates a standard that is in fact a national one: the PTO is located in the Eastern District of Virginia; applications for trademark registration are filed there; and subpoena enforcement will frequently be sought in that district. Indeed, for any foreign corporation without a preexisting United States presence, the majority's decision will be controlling."

Happy Christmas / Holidays

On the assumption that no more items will be posted to Conflict of Laws .net before 25th December, and possibly 1st January (although we did, in fact, churn out quite a few posts in the festive period last year), I would like to wish everyone a Happy Christmas / Holiday, and a very Happy New Year. I hope everyone returns in 2008 thoroughly refreshed and recharged, helped along by a diet of turkey, fruit cake, mince pies and plenty of wine.

I would like to quickly mention our team of 15 National Editors. If you find this website useful and/or interesting, it is because of their expertise, dedication and generosity. 325 items on new cases, legislation, publications, news, reviews or whatever else have been posted on Conflict of Laws .net during 2007, which represents a considerable amount of time and effort. We have several more scholars joining the team in 2008. If your country is not represented on Conflict of Laws .net, and you would be interested in becoming an Editor, I would be delighted to hear from you.

Best wishes, Martin George.

Some Political Drama in the Conflict of Laws in Canada

The most recent chapter in the long-running and highly public dispute between businessman Karlheinz Schreiber and former Prime Minister of Canada Brian Mulroney involves significant conflict of laws issues. On December 20, 2007, Justice Cullity of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice released his decision holding that Schreiber's claim was dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. The decision is not yet posted but should be soon on the CanLII web site (available here).

In Schreiber v. Mulroney the plaintiff sued the former Prime Minister of Canada for $300,000, alleging that Mulroney had breached an agreement to help him with certain business ventures after leaving office. The underlying facts have raised some concerns, in part because of the way Schreiber paid Mulroney, which was in large amounts of cash. Mulroney was served outside Ontario, in Quebec. He moved to challenge the court's jurisdiction or in the alternative for a stay of proceedings in favour of Quebec.

Justice Cullity held that there was no real and substantial connection between the dispute and Ontario, and as a result Ontario did not have jurisdiction. He accordingly dismissed the action. On the facts, it is hard to argue with this decision. So much connected the dispute with Quebec and very little connected it to Ontario. Justice Cullity indicated that had the court had jurisdiction, he would have stayed proceedings in favour of Quebec.

There are several points in the decision worthy of at least brief comment. One relates to the issue of attornment. Mulroney's Ontario lawyer initially indicated a willingness to accept service, but on seeing the statement of claim he refused to do so because of the lack of connection between the dispute and Ontario. Justice

Cullity correctly held that this did not raise any issue of Mulroney having attorned – his lawyer did not in the end accept the service. More problematic, though, is his obiter dictum that “as it is accepted that valid service is not by itself sufficient to establish jurisdiction, an acceptance of service should not have this effect by treating it as an attornment and, in effect, a submission to the jurisdiction” (para. 25).

In this statement, Justice Cullity may be confusing issues of service inside the jurisdiction with those of service outside Ontario. Valid service outside Ontario is indeed not enough for jurisdiction: the real and substantial connection must also be shown. But this is not the case for service inside Ontario. If the defendant is served based on presence inside the jurisdiction, either personally or through an accepting Ontario lawyer, that has traditionally been sufficient for jurisdiction and, even in the wake of Morguard, there is no further search for a real and substantial connection. This raises no issue of attornment. Had Mulroney’s lawyer accepted service in Ontario that should have ended the jurisdictional inquiry. The fact that an Ontario lawyer accepts service for a defendant outside the jurisdiction does not make this any less an instance of service inside the jurisdiction.

Second, Justice Cullity states that “Where a defendant moves to set aside service on the ground that there is no real and substantial connection with Ontario, the question will be whether there is a good arguable case that the connection exists” (para. 18.2). There is room to dispute, or maybe just dislike, this formulation. Put this way, the test may be too easy for a plaintiff to satisfy. The plaintiff does not have to only show a good argument that there is a real and substantial connection – the plaintiff must show such a connection does exist. If facts relevant to the analysis of jurisdiction are in dispute, then it is generally correct to say that only a good arguable case need be shown that those facts can be established before the court can then make use of them in its analysis of the connection. But that analysis then looks for a real and substantial connection, not a good arguable case for such a connection. Whether there is a real and substantial connection is primarily a legal conclusion, not a factual one.

Third, Justice Cullity seems to think that the eight-factor Muscutt formulation is focused on tort claims, and that further factors need to be considered in contract claims (para. 37). He goes on to consider the place where the contract was made, performed and breached and where any damage was sustained. These are appropriate things to consider, but it may not be helpful to label them as additional factors to add to the eight in Muscutt. Rather, they are relevant considerations under some of those factors (which are reasonably general). One of these factors is the connection between the forum and the plaintiff's claim, and another is any unfairness to the defendant in taking jurisdiction. Each of these considerations can and should be considered as part of those factors, just as the location of where a tort occurred would be. Adding more factors to the Muscutt framework on a case-by-case basis runs the risk of making the analysis of a real and substantial connection even more complex.

Fourth, Justice Cullity's analysis of Rule 17.02, the heads for service out without leave, is not the most conventional. He starts his overall analysis looking for whether there is a real and substantial connection, and only subsequently comes on to look at the heads. While both must be satisfied in a service out case, the typically approach looks first at whether the claim fits within one or more heads, and then if it does looks for the connection. In addition, Justice Cullity, in quite brief reasons, finds that Schreiber's claim does not fit within the heads. This is something of a surprise given the breadth of Rule 17.02(h), damage sustained in Ontario. Justice Cullity finds that Schreiber was in effect seeking restitution of the $300,000, rather than damages for breach of contract (para. 70). But this seems to adopt a very narrow meaning for the head. Even in a claim in unjust enrichment, the plaintiff has suffered a loss and that loss can be located geographically, Schreiber being an Ontario resident. It is hard to see how this loss is not "damage sustained".

In the end, even if there is force to these criticisms, none of them impugn the conclusion that there was not a real and substantial connection to Ontario on the facts of this case. But much is at stake in this litigation, and so an appeal seems a reasonable possibility.